NEW YORK MARKETS.

SHARES AND MONEY.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 5.—The Financier this week says: "The notable feature of the official statement of the New York Associated Banks last week was the decrease in surplus reserve, the result of an important loss in cash caused by a large, though exceptional movement in Boston for the needs of a local corporation, and there were also comparatively large shipments of currency to the South, influenced by some activity in the movement of cotton in the plantations. The reduction in cash was principally due, however, to absorptions of money from the banks by the subtreasury, in consequence of the fiscal operations, payments through the banks for customs and for transfers of internal revenue collections from western depositories through their New York correspondents being greatly in excess of current disbursements by the treasury. The decrease in specie was $1,246,900, and in legal tenders $1,417,200, making the total loss of cash $2,672,900, which amount it may be observed closely corresponds with the $2,555,300 loss to the banks, as estimated on the basis of the traceable movements of money during the week. The required reserve was reduced $695,-150, through a decrease of $1,392,600 in deposits. Deducting this sum of $695,150 from the total loss of cash, leaves $2,230,850 as the decrease in surplus reserve, which now is $37,294,975. Calculated upon the basis of deposits, less those of $37,224,400 of public funds, the surplus is $24,668,250. The statement failed to balance by $570,250, this being the difference between the sum of the loss of cash, less the increase of $1,904,200 in bonds and the amount of the decrease in deposits. The above-stated expansion in the loan item was most likely due more to the extension of accommodation to mercantile borrowers than to the stock commission houses and therefore it was regarded as unimportant. It may be noted that the loans are $6,214,500 in excess of the deposits, against $2,797,900 in the previous week. Though business on the Stock Exchange was less in volume than in the week ending August 22, the average daily clearings were $21,000,000 greater, amounting to $151,000,000; the increase was probably largely due to the September settlements which were in progress during the week. Though the decrease in surplus reserve was important, as above noted, there does not seem to be any indication that the movement of money for crop purposes has begun to be large, this being confined to shipments largely to the South of not more than $500,000 so far as could be traced. Moreover, the fact that the treasury is absorbing considerable sums ought not to cause anxiety, for should these absorptions continue to be large, the Secretary will probably be induced to extend relief through an increase of deposits for public funds in the national bank depositories. Comparisons of changes in loans show that three of the larger banks increased this item by $1,400,000 net. Five institutions lost $3,800,000 net in cash."

INDIANS OBJECT TO PROPOSED EVICTION.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION SET IN BOXALL CASE.

Man With Broken Head Found at Barstow Cannot Recall the Circumstances of Accident or Assault—Farm Laborer Commits Suicide.

SAN BERNARDINO, Sept. 5.—Chief Aumentos Chopo, leader of the Indians of the San Felipe reservation in San Diego county, was in the city yesterday and engaged the services of E. E. Katz, Esq., to inquire into the causes leading to the eviction of the Indians from the reservation, which has been ordered, and to take any reasonable steps to have the order rescinded. The Indians have been ordered by the government to vacate their camps and follow their Warner ranch brothers to the new reservation at Pala. For over 100 years the Indians have resided on a small section of the big San Felipe cattle ranch, comprising over 11,000 acres of land. Their forefathers lived there before them and their dead are buried there. The ranch is now leased by a Frenchman named Grant, and is under the control of R. F. Garner of this city. Both Grant and Garner have made frequent complaint to the authorities at Washington that the Indians have persistently stolen their cattle, on an average of a couple of steers a week. The Indians emphatically deny the charge. They will undoubtedly be hurried off to Pala. They will probably offer no resistance. Chief Chopo says: "We know the government has the power, and we will go; but we want to know why we are so suddenly ordered from our homes."

Chopo and his interpreter returned to San Felipe yesterday.

BOXALL PRELIMINARY SET.

According to a stipulation filed several months ago, next Monday is set as the date for holding the preliminary examination of William Boxall, Fred Lloyd and Horace Little, who are implicated as principal and alleged accessories in the shooting of C. R. Lloyd, the capitalist who died en route home from a trip to Japan. It is probable, however, that a further continuance will be asked, as it is desired to obtain legal proofs of Lloyd's death before the prosecution takes further steps. Dist.-Atty. Sprecher is at Catalina. When he left here he had not decided whether or not to file a new complaint against Boxall, changing the complaint from assault with a deadly weapon to that of murder.

SANTA ANA.

LEGAL DECISIONS.

SANTA ANA, Sept. 5.—In the interpleader proceedings instituted by Taylor et al. against Saling et al., the question of the right of Justice Smithwick's court to jurisdiction was waived by the two parties at the hearing given them this afternoon. The trial of the case was set for September 14.

The decision of Judge Bledsoe of the Superior Court of Riverside county in the case of the Anaheim Water Company vs. O. B. Fuller, defendant, gives the water company a complete victory, unless the matter is carried to the Supreme Court on some point of law, in which case there would still be a possibility of a reversal on a technicality. Judge Bledsoe's decision denies to Fuller the use of the water of the Santa Ana River on non-riparian land. E. E. BOYS TURN HIGHWAYMEN.

Held Up and Robbed Newspaper Carrier of About Their Own Age in Broad Daylight.

John Trieweiler, aged 14, a newspaper carrier whose home is at No. 1186 East Thirty-seventh street, was the victim of a highway robbery yesterday morning in broad daylight, at least that is the story he told the detectives, and as an exhibit to prove the truth of it showed them a badly battered face.

He says he was delivering his papers between Stanley and Slauson avenue, when he was set upon by three boys about his own age, none of whom were known to him. They stopped him, compelled him to get off his bicycle, and then demanded money. He had very little with him, and refused the demand. Then all three of the youngsters attacked him. He fought back as best he could, but they were too much for him. The relieved hom of 20 cents and a pocket knife, but permitted him to keep his wheel.

He told his mother about the matter as soon as he reached home, and she notified the police. At their request she brought her son to the Police Station, where he told his story to the officers, and gave as good a description of his assailants as he could remember.

HIS STORY DOUBTED.

J. H. Smith Tells a Tale About Being Given Knock-out Drops and Then Being Robbed of a Check.

J. H. Smith of No. 501 Miami avenue appeared at the Police Station last night in a buggy accompanied by two women. He told a story, as to the truth of which the detectives express doubts, although he told it in good faith. He said that he had received from a client a check for $265 on the American National Bank, and placed it in his pocket without having indorsed it.

Then he went out with a number of "congenial" companions and they had a few drinks, how many he does not remember. He declared that one of his companions gave him knock-out drops in a glass of Canadian rye whisky, and he went to sleep. When he recovered consciousness his check was missing. He at once jumped to the conclusion that he had been robbed.

Smith showed evidences of the "few drinks" he had taken, and inasmuch as it is hardly probable that any person would administer knockout drops to secure a check which had not been indorsed, the detectives believe it more probable that he lost the check

Taggart Lays Down a Creed for Methodist Delegates.

Warm Contests Looked for at the Annual Conference Next Week.

The board of directors of the Young Men's Christian Association held a meeting last night to consider the subject of purchasing a lot for the erection of the proposed new association building, but no definite conclusion was reached. Among the properties considered was a lot on the corner of Second and Hill streets, one on Hill street between Second and Third, the corner of Sixth and Hill now occupied by Temple Baptist Church, and two lots adjoining the latter property on the south.

The board adjourned last night to meet at the call of the president, and it is intimated that he will call a meeting very soon when the lot question will be disposed of.

The association is now located in its temporary quarters at No. 614 South Hill street, across the street from the last two properties mentioned, and is pushing forward such temporary improvements as will enable it to hold its membership together while its own new building is being erected. The total membership, as shown by the report of the secretary to the board of directors, August 31, was 1402, and that statement alone will make evident the task before the management in undertaking to satisfactorily provide for them in limited temporary quarters.

Including two rooms occupied by Secretary Cleaver, an living rooms, on the second floor, the association has ten rooms, with the prospect of securing two more on the second floor. The eight rooms on the ground floor are occupied as follows: On the left of the corridor, a large room used as office and reading-room and to the rear of this Secretary Cleaver's private office. To the right of the corridor is a large room for boys' meetings and educational classes, and adjoining this a music room. Back of the cross-hall the mining and chemistry room, mechanical-drawing room, dining-room and kitchen.

When the educational campaign opens up it will be necessary to convert most of these into schoolrooms, part of the time, and in this way the work will be carried on satisfactorily, all things being considered.

Fronting on Hill street a large one-story frame structure, 50x70 feet, is now being built for a gymnasium, and it will be all complete and fitted up for use by October 1. Two handball courts, each 22x30 feet, are being constructed at the north side of the permanent building, and will be ready in a couple of weeks. The baths and lockers in the basement will be ready at the same time.

The association has a lease on the property for one year, with the privilege of a renewal if the new building is not ready for occupancy when that time has expired.

METHODIST GINGER.

TAGGART'S ELEVEN DEMANDS.

The near approach of the annual conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Southern California, which will meet in this city on September 16, is causing many heated controversies over the election of delegates.

The matter of burning interest, locally, hinges upon who shall represent the Southern California conference in the General Conference, which meets here in May, 1904.

Simultaneously with the meeting of the annual conference next week, which will elect four ministerial delegates to the General Conference, will be held the lay electoral conference, to elect four laymen to the same general body.

Among those who seek the honor of representing Los Angeles as one of the laymen is W. L. Cleveland of the Boyle Heights Church. Mr. Cleveland was indorsed by the official board of his church as their choice, and the board notified their representative to the lay electoral conference, H. S. Taggart, of their action, and there seemed to be nothing for Taggart to do but vote for Cleveland.

In response to the notification, however, Taggart addressed a letter to the board, in which he outlined eleven propositions that the candidate who receives his suffrage must agree to support in the General Conference, before Taggart will vote for him as a delegate.

These propositions covered the entire scope of the polity of the Methodist church, including some questions upon which the church is by no means a unis, and placing a binding collar of Taggartism upon his choice for delegate, regardless of the will of the congregation. Among other things, he demands a return to the three-years' itineracy, and equal rights of men and women in every particular—both ministerial and lay.

This elaborate platform was more than Cleveland, or any other man, could individually swallow, and he wrote Taggart a letter, telling him so, but declaring that if the Boyle Heights official board indorsed the eleven propositions, he would gladly support all of them, if elected a delegate. Cleveland further suggested that if there was any doubt about his receiving the support of Taggart, in accordance with the wish of the official board, it would be agreeable for the latter to give place to the alternate.

Taggart's somewhat biting reply to this letter was directly to the effect that he was not amenable to the official board; inferentially, that he would do as he pleased, and positively, that the implied insult was the greatest he had ever received.

Mr. Cleveland will now go before the lay conference, lacking the support of his own bailiwick, but with Taggart's eleven demands in his hands as a club, will put up a hot fight, among the other delegates.

LIKE THEIR PREACHER.

The Boyle Heights Methodist Church will hold a service this morning, at which it expects to entirely wipe out the $4000 of its debt still being actually unpaid. This debt is provided for by the system of bonds, adopted at the time of the dedication of the church, and this morning the offerings of those holding the bonds will be laid upon the altar as a voluntary offering, and no appeal will be made for money. A reorganized choir of thirty-eight voices, under W. L. Cleveland as director, will render special music. Today also marks the close of the sixth year of the pastorate of Rev. E. J. Inwood, the only minister of the denomination in Southern California who has served more than five years continuously. So well pleased are his people that they will send up a request to the bishop again this year that he be returned to them.

DROVE HORSE TO DEATH.

George Amer, alias Abe Mayer, was arrested at Ninth and Stanford avenue late Friday night on a charge of drunkenness by Patrolman Willard Smith, after a desperate fight, in which the prisoner had to be handcuffed. At the time he had a fine horse and buggy, the animal showing evidences of having been hard driven. The rig was placed in the Fashion Stables and the police thought the incident closed, except that Amer was to be prosecuted. Last night it was learned that the horse had died. The animal had been rented from the Boyle Heights Livery Stables, and it is probable that Amer will be prosecuted for cruelty to animals.

I had twenty-seven teeth extracted by Dr. Schiffman without any pain. I have since had an upper and lower plate made, and they fit fine. They fit so tight that it is with difficulty that I can remove them. I cannot express myself highly of Dr. Schiffman and his methods, and advise every one needing work done to patronize him.

RECEPTION TENDERED PROF. PINCHOT.

CHIEF FORESTER THE GUEST AT AN ELEGANT DINNER.

Committee Having the Selection of a Site for Government Garden Experiments Difficulty in Securing Bids of Land.—Faker Dupes the Credulous.

PASADENA, Office of The Times, No. 38 South Raymond avenue, Sept. 5.—Prof. Gifford Pinchot, Chief Forester of the Bureau of Forestry of the United States government, was tendered a flattering reception last evening by the Board of Trade, Mayor, Councilmen and other prominent citizens at the Hotel Maryland. He was the guest at an elegant informal dinner before the reception, the other guests being Mayor William H. Vedder, Hon. T. P. Lukens, Supervisor B. W. Hahn, President F. P. Newton of the Board of Trade; William R. Staats, Congressman James McLachlan, D. M. Linnard, Ralph Hosmer of the Forestry Bureau, Assemblyman J. A. Goodrich and R. H. Sinclair.

Quite a number of representatives of citizens met the professor after dinner, and after an informal exchange of salutations, a convenient corner was found in the pal atial hotel, where President Boynton of the Board of Trade had the crowd gathered and where he formally introduced Uncle Sam's chief ranger. The necessity for the practical reforestation of the mountains in this particular section of the country was dwelt upon with emphasis and in an extended manner. Professor Pinchot reviewed the work that has been done in this direction hereabouts from the time that it was first begun by Prof. T. P. Lukens of Pasadena in 1892, when no one else seemed to realize the great importance of the work, down to the present time.

He referred to the discouraging conditions which existed when the work was first and continued, of the failures that attended the earlier efforts to reforest the big hills and to afford protection to the watersheds, a fact that has become known to be understood and appreciated by all thinking people now residing in this part of the world. Danger of fire in the hills was vividly and emphatically impressed upon his auditors by Mr. Pinchot. "One of the most important and essential things for this neighborhood," said he, "is the establishment of a perfected system of trails through the mountains so that the men can get quickly to where there may be a fire. Such a system of trails is more necessary than even anything else.

"Your water supply depends upon the keeping of these fires. I might say protection from fire is the choice duty of the government in this matter of forest protection and reforestation."

Continuing, Prof. Pinchot told of the importance of the planting of chaparral in the hills, and of its great value in conserving the water. He spoke of President Roosevelt's interest in the work as "intensely alive," and declared that the great interest manifested by the Chief Executive of the country was of inestimable benefit to the Bureau of Forestry in its efforts to accomplish what it is endeavoring to.

After his address the professor was asked innumerable questions by his audience, which he answered with evident satisfaction.

Late last night Prof. Pinchot, accompanied by Mr. Lukens and Ralph Hosmer, started up the trail in the direction of Wilson's Peak. They will remain in the mountains until Monday morning. After making an inspection of the work of tree planting that has been done by Mr. Lukens, they will return to Los Angeles in time to take the Owl on Monday night for San Francisco. From the northern metropolis he will leave in time to address the National Irrigation Convention at Ogden, Utah.

PASADENA, Office of The Times, No. 3 South Raymond avenue, Sept. 6.—Prof. Gifford Pinchot, Chief Forester of the Bureau of Forestry of the United States government, was tendered a delightful reception last evening by the Board of Trade, Mayor, Councilmen and other prominent citizens at the Hotel Maryland. He was the guest at an elegant informal dinner before the reception, the other guests being Mayor William R. Vedder, Hon. T. P. Lukens, member of the Board of Trade; William H. After a number of representative citizens met the professor after dinner, and after an informal exchange of views, a convenient corner was found in the pal atial hotel, where Mayor Boynton of the Board of Trade, the crowd gather, and where he was formally introduced Uncle Sam's forest manager. The necessity for the proper reforestation of the mountains in this particular section of the country was dwelt upon with emphasis and was extended manner. Danger of fire in the hills was vividly and emphatically expressed upon his auditors by Mr. Pinchot. WATER THE BUGBEAR.

The committee having in charge the matter of securing the government experimental garden for this section, find that the principal obstacle in the way of success is the lack of water. There are tracts and tracts of land that would be in few instances is there enough water to go with them. There is plenty of land in La Cañada, but little water; another in Altadena, in which some water might be secured. The La Cañadans are working on a reservoir which would supply water by storing it from the rains in the mountains. The Johnston ranch has been favorably considered.

Despite the fact that the committee advertised for bids of land, but few have been submitted to Secretary Way. H. McCormick of No. 3 avenue has a tract of land just across the Arroyo, in the city. He says his land runs into the hills and is practically free. The committee meets this evening and may visit the ranch today.

CORNER-STONE PROGRAMME.

The Masons have decided fully upon the programme which is to accompany the laying of the corner-stone of their new temple on the corner of Marengo avenue and Union street. The exercises will be held on Tuesday afternoon, September 15, beginning at 2 o'clock. The programme will be as follows: "At the Door," Schubert Quartette; invocation, Rev. A. W. Ackley; address, Rev. Robert J. Burdette; laying of corner-stone, prayer, Rev. Herndon Garnett; music, "Hosanna Foundation," congregation; benediction.

FORTUNE TELLER VANISHES.

The people who did not have anything better to do, answered an advertisement which an individual calling himself B. W. Henderson had circulated, informing the present supply of money that he could tell them anything that they wanted to know, and things that they wouldn't like to know, if they would cross his palm with a few or more dollars. One of the victims of Henderson's dipping into the realm of ancient history was that of a few friends should come around in a day or so later and get the returns. A dozen or more people called at the office on East Colorado street, and for the revelations which they had been to make and for which they had paid their good coin. The fortune teller had taken his leave some time during the night, as far as they could learn had not left money behind him. There was a card on his door announcing that he had gone to Alhambra, but his pursuers say he has gone farther. Some of the people expressed the hope in loud and angry tones that they would like to see him to even a greater depth.

CAUGHT IN PASSING.

CONFEDERATE "VETS" FAILED TO RALLY.

INFORMAL CAMP FIRE OF G.A.R. AT LONG BEACH.

Evident Intention of the Southern Pacific to Take Possession of an Avenue. Baptist Reception—Large Catch of Rock Cod.

LONG BEACH, Sept. 5.—For several years one of the jolly features of the encampments here has been the annual bath. This morning the time came around again and the camp turned out in force for the frolic. Many who did not dare brave the breakers lined the sand and gave those who did characteristic encouragement. It is needless to say that all who participated enjoyed it thoroughly.

This afternoon was set apart for the reception of Confederate veterans, but they did not show up in numbers as usual. For this reason no attempt was made at a formal programme, but all who could be found had a cordial welcome. When it was known that the regular programme had been suspended the veterans and their ladies took possession of the big tent and gave an informal camp fire which was voted one of the best things in the week.

Tonight's entertainment was given by Bartlett Logan Post and Corps under the direction of Mrs. Clara C. Holland. No attempt was made at giving a long programme, the feeling being that something brief and lively would fit better at the end of the week. Among the numbers presented were readings Miss Fern Palmer and Miss Vera Delanter, vocal solos by Miss Nellie Coats and Mr. Scott and a piano solo by Miss Lurelle Harding Chase. In addition there were a number of selections by the Drum Corps and impromptu talks by the veterans.

Tomorrow will be memorial day and the exercises will be made more than usually impressive.

Up to today 423 veterans had registered, that number being far in advance of any other enrollment at this time.

One of the most interesting reunions brought about by the encampment is that of L. C. Trowbridge, Co. H, First Wisconsin, and Jasper Culver, Co. K of the same regiment. These two were captured September 20, 1863, at the battle of Chickamauga, and were confined together at Andersonville. They escaped together September 13 of the following year, and eleven days later entered the Union lines before Atlanta. Such experiences naturally bind men closely together, and their joy at meeting again after thirty-nine years of separation may be imagined. Mr. Culver is now a resident of Sierra Madre, and has been in Southern California for years, while Mr. Trowbridge is out here from the East to attend the encampments. They met first at San Francisco.

BAPTIST RECEPTION.

A reception was given in the parlors of the Hotel Riviera last night by the members of the Baptist Young People's Union to the strangers who have been attending that church. About 200 responded to their invitations, and all were made to pass a most enjoyable evening. An excellent programme was presented, consisting of musical numbers by the Misses Inmain, Leon Smith, George Benson, Mrs. Frank L. Norton, Miss Higley and the Sunday-school orchestra; recitations by Messrs. Benson, Meyer and Osborne, a humorous quartette by Messrs. Hale, Irwin, Osborne and Easterbrook and an exhibition of the wonderful wax dolls by Miss Grace Moody. The contest in securing names and addresses was won by Miss Lucy Lovell.

ESPEE GRABS TRACK.

Excitement was caused this morning by the announcement that the Southern Pacific was taking possession of Railroad avenue between Cerritos and Bonita avenues. When the road ran a sidetrack to the old brick warehouse in that tract it was placed on blocks 99 and 100. These have since been sold, and the track ordered off. This morning the section gang began to move the track out into Railroad avenue in response to this order. They stopped, however, when ordered to do so by Street Superintendent Teel, and referred the matter to the general offices in Los Angeles. It is expected here that the row will wake up some morning and find this street in the possession of the Southern Pacific.

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT.

Edith, daughter of Mrs. J. F. Smith, living three miles north of town, was terribly injured today and may not recover. She was accidentally run over by a wagon loaded with two tons of hay, a wheel passing over her waist. It is considered almost miraculous that she was not instantly killed.

In a series of seven games played on the local grounds yesterday afternoon I. C. Weed of Ontario won the roque championship of Southern California from S. S. Strong of Pomona, holder of the medal. Only five games were needed to decide, but the contest was a warm one for all that. It is hoped that Mr. Huxtable of Ontario can be here Monday to play another series with the winner. In a side game played at the same time with the championship contest F. J. Parker of this city accepted a handicap of 16 and defeated Harry Cardell of Los Angeles.

A. S. Cates and wife of Salt Lake City are among the latest additions to Long Beach citizenship. Mr. Cates has accepted a position with the National Bank of Long Beach.

MONROVIA.

FRUIT EXCHANGE ELECTS.

MONROVIA, Sept. 5.—At the annual meeting of the Duarte-Monrovia Fruit Exchange held today, the following directors were elected for the ensuing year: W. H. Young, William Chippendale, John Scott, W. W. Bacon, C. A. Brown, H. Merriell, E. Pinney, R. R. Smith, M. Haig, Thomas Wardall, A. H. Johnson. The secretary-manager, John P. Dunn, presented his report for the past season, which, considering the unusually low prices realized for oranges throughout Southern California, makes a remarkably good showing. The total amount of oranges shipped was 298 cars, and the net amount paid to growers was $89,518.78, after all expenses were paid. This is an average of $300 a car, and does not look to be a large sum, but a considerable portion of fruit was seedlings, which did not pay expenses. There are no returns yet from Valencias, of which there are thirty-five cars, and which will bring better prices than any other variety.

The exchange shipped twenty-five carloads more than last year. The sum of $2625.21 was received and paid out to growers on account of damage claims. The average price for Navel Washington navels was $1.24; choice, 87½; fancy sweets, $1.20; St. Michaels, $1.05. A very good showing was made with lemons. For the nine and one-half cars shipped, including all sizes and grades, an average of 90 cents per box was realized.

The question of opening a packing-house in Monrovia was discussed, and the matter is still open for settlement.

At a meeting of the directors, following the stockholders' meeting, the following officers were elected: President, W. H. Young; vice-president, William Chippendale; secretary-manager, J. P. Dunn; treasurer, First National Bank.

CASHIER ELECTED.

The First National Bank of El Monte will commence business about October 15. At a meeting of the directors last evening A. F. Snell was elected cashier. Mr. Snell was at one time connected with the First National Bank of Pasadena. The cashier was instructed to call for 50 per cent. of the capital stock, to be paid in by the 15th inst. The circulation will be $10,000, issued in $10 and $20 bills. The correspondents will be Chase National Bank, New York; Nevada National Bank, San Francisco; Farmers' and Merchants' National, Los Angeles.

NEW PLANING MILL AND SUBSTANTIAL BUSINESS BLOCKS.

Work Being Rushed on Additions to School Building—Plans for Building Masonic Temple—Numerous Residences in Progress—Morgan Ranch Sold.

WHITTIER, Sept. 5.—Whittier's best friends have hard work to keep track of her progress lately, so many new enterprises are contemplated by her citizens and so many new buildings are constantly going up. Among the most recent of these is the planing mill which will be erected by J. H. Linkletter and Charles Patton, the ground for which was broken this week. The mill is to be built on the east side of Milton avenue, between Philadelphia street and Bailey street. The mill proper will cover a ground space of 50x60 feet, the rear of the lot being left for storage. A thirty-six-horse-power engine and forty-horse-power boiler has been purchased for the new enterprise.

BANK IMPROVEMENTS.

Another improvement just planned for the business section is the enlargement of the quarters of the Whittier Bank, which has leased the room at present occupied by C. Trueblood & Son's dry-goods store, and will remodel it so as to add its entire space to their already well-planned banking rooms. A new steel vault, safety-deposit boxes, etc., are also among the improvements to be put in.

BUSINESS BLOCK.

A. Jacobs, who put up a fine business building about three years ago, will next week let the contract for another two-story brick building, the outside to be a counterpart of the first building, which it will join on the south. The new block will be finished in one large store, and on the second floor will be sixteen offices and living-rooms, with all modern conveniences.

MORE PROGRESS.

Henry Page this week let the contract for a finely-equipped plumbing establishment which he will put up on West Philadelphia street, D. F. Couplin securing the work.

Charles Ott of the Whittier Crude Oil Company is another to show his faith in this section. Mr. Ott this week bought two fine business lots just west of the old Hotel Ramona, and about January 1 will let the contract for a two-story brick structure.

Carpenters are also rushing work on two new schoolrooms which are to be finished in the basement of the new Penn-street school building. This building was only completed last year, and when it was planned the Trustees considered that they had ample room for the smaller grades for some time. That in less than two years they find it necessary to enlarge the building so much is but one evidence of the rapid growth of this little city.

Whittier Lodge, F. and A.M., this week ratified the action of their Building Committee, and purchased a valuable business lot on Greenleaf avenue for $2400. This is selected as a site for the Masonic Temple which they are considering building.

With all this activity in the business section, where, beside these new enterprises, there are a number of fine buildings under way, the building of houses shows no diminution. O. M. Souden, president of the Whittier Bank; Amos Maple, assistant cashier of the National Bank; Charles E. Tebbetts, president of Whittier College; Job Osborn, William Beeson and many others having substantial homes partly erected.

LAND SALES.

A land sale of interest this week was the sale of what is known as the Morgan ranch of five acres, from E. L. Doheny to J. P. Armstrong, J. C. Hiatt and A. L. Reed. This fine property, which lies in the heart of the city, will later be subdivided and put on the market.

E. L. Bacon this week bought for the Murphy Oil Company, 240 acres of foothill land, extending from a point just north of Horatio Landreth's ranch, in La Habra, to the John Scott ranch. The land is bought for its oil prospects, although it is also valuable from the rancher's point of view, as the new line to La Habra runs through its entire length. The same company lately acquired 5000 acres on the Los Coyotes Hills, and more recently 160 acres near Mrs. Toler's place. The willingness of this successful oil company to get these large tracts of land, and their frank admission that they want it for oil development, tells its own story of the future of this oil field.

SANTA CATALINA ISLAND.

NOT ANOTHER TUNA.

AVALON, Sept. 5.—The yellowtail were biting in fine style today, and everybody, including the tuna fishers, were pulling them in. The demonstration made by the tuna Thursday brought a number of anglers over from Los Angeles, and, notwithstanding they "whipped the stream" most assiduously all day, the efforts were barren of results. Not a tuna was seen. The previous afternoon three strikes were reported, but none of the fish were hooked. Apparently the tuna book is closed for this year, with a record of only five of these gamy fighters—and not a "button" fish among them. One only was of the requisite weight to entitle to club membership, and the chance was lost on this one by the angler being conquered instead of conquering. All the others weighed less than 100 pounds, most of them tipping the scales at thirty-five pounds.

Britton Davis and wife, out with Percy Neale yesterday, in the Alleen, took five yellowtail, nine rock bass and a whitefish.

Several more of "the smallest yellowtail" were taken yesterday. Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Backus, while fishing in the vicinity of Long Point, took half a dozen of these kindergartners, and J. W. Shirley also took one which weighed but one pound and eleven ounces.

R. M. Sprowls, William Turner and C. A. Gibbs of Los Angeles made the banner catch this morning with Mexican Joe, in the Juanita, bringing in twenty-five big yellowtail.

F. Michaelis, with the Augusta, brought in twelve rock bass and a thirty-pound yellowtail.

M. Kenna, with the Edna, had four yellowtail and five bass.

J. N. Peters and J. T. Crimmins, with the Rival, had four yellowtail.

Dr. Carpenter of New York, with George Michaelis in the Pauline, took twelve fine yellowtail.

J. M. Hough of Redlands, D. Dougherty of Nebraska, J. T. Colwell of Fresno, Mr. O'Brien of San Francisco made a fine catch with the Marie, bringing in eleven yellowtail and a rock bass.

INSURANCE PARTY.

Quite a party of insurance people came over yesterday to engage in a few days' fishing. In the party are Gage E. Tarbell, vice-president and general manager of the Equitable Life, with his wife, daughter, son and valet, and Miss Armendt; A. M. Shields, Pacific Coast agent for the same company, with his wife; Gen. A. W. Barrett, now also connected with the Equitable, and his wife, and Capt. Loiffler of Washington, D. C., who has been doorkeeper at the White House continuously ever since Grant's first administration, with his wife and daughter. The party went out this this morning under the chaperonage of Gen. Barrett, president of the Tuna Club, in three launches, and if there are any tuna left in the creek tonight it will not be their fault.

PICNICS AND BARBECUE.

Cherries are ripe! There was a cherry-picking picnic to Pebbly Beach yesterday afternoon, the party going down in a big rowboat and going up the cañon where the wild cherries grow. The Catalina cherry is a luscious fruit, as to taste, and the trees bear most prolifically, bearing great clusters of big, black berries as large as the largest cultivated Oxheart cherries that reach our markets, the only fault being that the pits are abnormally large. The party took their supper with them, and ate it around a blazing bonfire after making delicious coffee. The participants were Mrs. A. L. New, Mrs. R. D. Richards, Miss Maude Elisabeth Richards, Miss Grace Eleanor Mathes, E. M. Hough, Frank Rockwell.

C. H. White of Colorado Springs arranged an excursion with barbecue accompaniment, to the Isthmus this morning on the launch Ohio. The party was composed of C. von Lowenstein and A. Munchemyer of Germany, Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Richards, Mrs. Henry P. Lowe and daughter Irene, Miss Ida Bowen, Miss Lillian Weller, Mrs. Listenwalter, Mrs. T. B. McCauley, with Capt. Clarence Jargstorff as master of ceremonies.

PERSONAL.

W. F. Mason, organist of the First Presbyterian Church of Pasadena is spending his vacation at Catalina.

Frederick Wilfred Norman and bride came over yesterday to spend a fortnight of their honeymoon on the island and are domiciled in one of the Hutchings cottages. Mrs. Norman was formerly Miss Marion Gordon, a London contralto, but who has adopted Los Angeles as her home.

Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Taylor of El Paso left for home this morning, having been here since June 18. They had a launch built to order and have had a lot of enjoyment from it.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Albert left this morning for a month's recreation in the northern part of the State.

Neil Blackley, Lorraine Walker and R. C. Farrell are three Los Angeles boys over here for a few days' outing at the Canvas City.

J. O. Wells and wife, with the Magic Isle yesterday, took six huge albicore averaging over thirty-five pounds, and six skipjacks.

Miss Hanni F. Gazley and Miss Marie G. Miller of Cincinnati are visiting the island, stopping on Marilla avenue for a few weeks.

Dr. A. W. Runnells of Parral, Mex., is at the Metropole.

L. C. Brand and wife and Miss Austeeng George of Los Angeles are guests at the Metropole.

J. A. Buchanan and Francis F. Rowland of Pasadena are Metropole guests.

W. D. Hubbard and wife and J. D. Martin and wife of Los Angeles, principal stockholders in the Meteor Boat Company, left at 9 o'clock last evening on the Meteor for a cruise among the Channel Islands. They will visit Santa Cruz, Santa Rosa, Santa Barbara and Anacapa Islands and expect to return here Monday night.

The United States training ship Alert weighed anchor at midnight last night and left for other parts.

If this is the "nub" end of the season, one would not be able to discern the fact from the crowded condition of the steamers arriving every day. The Hermosa today brought over 500 people, and the passenger list during the past two weeks has scarcely dropped below 200 on the noon boat.

CLAREMONT.

WOODMEN ORGANIZE.

CLAREMONT, Sept. 5.—The local camp of Modern Woodmen was the host last evening in a conclave of seventy delegates to the Modern Woodmen Camps of Lordsburg, Pomona, Covina, Lemon, South Ontario, Upland and Glendora.

After the initiation of a member into the local lodge, in which the Lordsburg team assisted, the assemblage proceeded at once to the main business of the evening, viz., the formation of a permanent organization of the camps.

U. R. Richardson and E. E. Cole, both of the Claremont camp, were elected to offices of president and secretary of the new organization. A motion was then passed that each camp select one delegate who serve as a member of a committee on organization, this committee to act in conjunction with the newly-elected officers. The name and all other details of the new organization will be left to this committee, which will report within two weeks. The new organization is already planning a big picnic to be held in October, aside from the perfecting of a permanent independent organization.

Conservative investors are well satisfied with nine (9) per cent. first mortgages which (after allowing for mortgage tax) nets them about six (6) per cent. We pay 4 per cent. net on certificates of deposit secured by first mortgages, which are better than straight mortgages, because they are backed up by the corporation liability in addition to the deposit of first mortgages with a trustee. You can find nothing safer bearing 6 per cent. per annum, interest payable semi-annually. Write for booklet "A Question Answered." The Protective Savings Mutual Building and Loan Association, 101 N. "IT CAN'T BE KEPT DOWN."

So Says H. E. Huntington in Regard to South.

Extension of Lines Ordered and Grading Begun.

Great Influx of Tourists is Prophesied—Increase of Rates.

Returning from an extended sojourn in the East, Henry E. Huntington is again in Los Angeles, enthusiastically optimistic and expressing unbounded faith in the future of Southern California.

"There is no limit to the possibilities of this favored section," said Mr. Huntington last evening. "It can't be kept down—it's too good. And this impression is rapidly gaining the possession of the minds of all classes and conditions throughout the East. This winter will witness the greatest influx of tourists yet of record. A majority will come solely for the purpose of 'viewing the land,' but 10 per cent. of the aggregate will remain as permanent and desirable residents.

"My coming at this time has no special import. I come first because I cannot keep away. I am not always actuated by financial conditions and possibilities. My heart is with this section. To complete the transfer of the Traction properties did not require my presence. That deal was closed long ago. It is a mistaken idea that I have personally secured a controlling interest in the new acquisition, nor is there any intent to merge the two systems. The interests are not identical. It is our purpose, however, to put the Traction line in a first-class operating condition. This, of course, will take time.

"The matter of extending our lines to Riverside and Santa Barbara, candt, for the present, receive serious consideration. Our inability to secure the delivery of rails makes it impossible. Extension, however, is but a question of rails. The public can rest assured that the purchase of opposing lines does not mean retrenchment. Extension will remain our policy.

"I am surprised that there should be any misunderstanding as to the Childs property. I bought it on speculation, and am in no hurry about selling. But as I have before stated, I will not stand in the way of improvements. Since last here there have been no overtures made to me as to its sale. I supposed the matter had been dropped.

"All this talk about my being associated with John Burson and others in the projected Bakersfield line is without foundation. I have no interest in the project. My engineers will be directed to this more southern section."

Although Mr. Huntington has been in the city but a day, construction has been ordered on the First-street extension of the Boyle Heights line of the Los Angeles Railway Company from its present terminus to the city limits. The franchise for this purpose was sold several months ago to Henry T. Hazard.

Mr. Huntington has also ordered the extension of the Westlake line to the Bimini baths; the grading of the San Pedro line; a spur from the Monrovia line through the Shorb and Winston places to a point near Lamanda Park, and as soon as rails can be procured the reconstruction of the Maple-avenue line will be effected.

It is Mr. Huntington's purpose to remain several weeks and he promises that something will be a-doing in the matter of extension if a prompt delivery of rails can be secured.

PASSENGER RATES INCREASED.

A general rise in passenger rates to and from Los Angeles and San Francisco and intermediate points, effective September 15, was announced yesterday by the local office of the Pacific Coast Steamship Company.

What is the cause of the increased tariff northward by steamer is not given out—up go the prices, and you pay 'em or leave 'em. The regular travel on these vessels this summer has been the heaviest in the history of the company for a like period, and all accommodations are still engaged so far ahead that passengers are made to sleep in the dining saloon each trip, as tightly packed as sardines.

Following is the new schedule of rates between principal points: First class, Los Angeles to San Francisco, advanced from $10.35 to $12.85, second class remaining unchanged at $7.35; to Santa Cruz, first class $11.35, second class $7.85; to Monterey, first class $10.85, second class $7.35; to Santa Barbara, first class $2.85, as against $2.50 formerly, second class $2.60; round trip, good thirty days, $5 first class. The round-trip rate to San Francisco is advanced from $13.75 to $25. There are no changes in the rates to San Diego.

A Mule in a Hammock.

William R. Harvey, a Chester, Pa., lawyer, owns an old-fashioned homestead in the First Ward, and among the stock is a mule that is quite a family pet. The mule got out of the pasture recently and roamed about the lawn, finally going on the wide porch. In making a turn the animal backed against a hammock, then slipped and sat down, and was unable to extricate itself. When Mr. Harvey went to the front porch to ascertain the cause of the braying the very unusual spectacle of a mule swinging in a hammock was presented.—[Philadelphia Record.

The Day of Jubilee Had Come for Times Scholarship Contestants.

THE jubilation over the third annual Times Scholarship Contest has passed into history. It took place yesterday, and was an unqualified success that will leave a host of pleasant memories with each who was so fortunate as to participate.

The day was crowded so full of happy events that it will take some time for the energetic lads and lassies, who worked so strenuously during the contest, to digest all of them; and to many of the party the experiences of the day were full of novelty and pregnant with the interest that comes from the fulfillment of long-anticipated pleasures.

First in the day's programme was a gathering of the contestants and a few of their friends at The Times office at 9 o'clock. They were taken through the various departments of the building, and the processes of making a daily paper were explained. The phalanx of typesetting machines excited deep interest, and a visit to the press rooms, where the big press was at work printing sections of the paper of today was a revelation to many of the visitors.

While the inspection of The Times office was in progress an array of automobiles was massed on North Broadway, and through the courtesy of the Auto Livery Company of No. 331 South Main street, of which R. G. Thompson is manager, the latest mode of transportation was made available for The Times party's spin around the city.

The procession was formed with the leading contestants in the front vehicles, and as the autos made the trip down Broadway, up Spring to Temple and then down Main street the plucky scholarship winners received an ovation all along the line. Each member of the party was supplied with a horn, and the citizens certainly were made aware that the contestants were on the ground. From the business district a run was made out to Westlake Park, and thence to "The Bivouac," where Gen. and Mrs. Otis and Miss Lorden received the party.

The young people expressed much interest in the arms and armor in the den. They partook of refreshments, and in various groups in the lawn their photographs were taken for souvenirs.

Following this visit a short trip was made through the southwestern residence section, and shortly after 12 o'clock all gathered at Sixth and Main streets, where a special car chartered by The Times from the Pacific Electric Railway Company was waiting to convey the party to Long Beach.

The car was in charge of Assistant General Passenger Agent H. F. Stewart and Superintendent A. F. Van Vranken. It was a delightful trip. The special was given the right of way, and the run from Sixth and Main to Long Beach was made in twenty-nine minutes. The guests were in high spirits, and made the welkin ring as the car sped over the line to the ocean. There was a dull moment on the way, and the same energy which the scholarship contestants had put into their work for the Times prizes was displayed in their enthusiasm and enjoyment of the programme prepared for them.

AT LONG BEACH.

Arriving at Long Beach the party was met by a Reception Committee from the Long Beach Board of Trade, its president, P. E. Hatch, and its secretary, J. A. Miller, and the faculty and students of the Long Beach Business College.

They were escorted to the banquet rooms of the Seaside Water Company at the bath-house, and there, with tables arranged so that the diners could look out on a magnificent marine view, a fine repast was served. The long tables were handsomely decorated, as was also the banquet hall, and the Entertainment Committee here was composed of students from the Long Beach Business College, Misses Anna M. Wood, Feria Wilhoit, Nellie N. Welsh, Ruby M. King, Lucy Fechter, Bertha Hillary, Lucy Phillips, Lois Borton, Ermine Hansen, Purtell and Kecherside; and the Messrs. Victor Robertson, S. M. Rice, Elmer Dunlap and B. E. Nelson.

The Reception Committee wore the college colors of white and green, and at each plate was a dainty souvenir in the shape of a "bleeding tooth" good-luck shell, to which was fastened a dainty ribbon bow for the lapel.

The visitors did full justice to the ample spread, and at its close gave rousing cheers for the Long Beach Board of Trade, the Business College of that city, and the Reception Committee.

Prof. E. K. Isaacs, president of the Woodbury Business College, who is a resident of Long Beach, and who desired to assist in the entertaining of the city's guests, had chartered the yacht Nellie, and upon his invitation the Times contestants and others, making up a party of seventy-five people, took a trip out to the government breakwater, it giving to many of the party their first ocean ride. All enjoyed it heartily, and returned to take advantage of the courtesy of the Long Beach Board of Trade which had secured the use of its bath-house, with suits, etc.

Here, as everywhere on the day's outing the Times hustlers made the most of the opportunities afforded them for enjoyment, and many proved themselves adepts in the water, both in the plunge and in the surf.

The entire time spent at Long Beach was a round of pleasure, and not an accident occurred to mar it. The special car for the return to the city was announced to leave Long Beach at 5 o'clock, and at that time an immense crowd had collected at the station to get a view of the happy company of prize-winners. As the party boarded the car there was a perfect ovation of cheers and shouts. It was good to see what a keen interest the people took in the plucky youngsters who had made such remarkable records during the contest which has just closed.

The veterans of the G.A.R., the ladies of the Woman's Relief Corps and the Spanish War veterans, who are all in camp on the sands at Long Beach, had lined up along the electric track, and as the car with the Times party passed along they waved flags and gave round after round of cheers, which were responded to with a right good will by the excursionists. This was probably the most lively demonstration of the day, and was a happy finale for the pleasant hours spent at Long Beach.

The run back to the city was quickly made, and the main theme of conversation during this time was the royal hospitality extended to the contestants on all sides. Many declared they had never spent a more pleasant day, and that they should always remember the happy events that had followed each other in such rapid succession.

The special car landed the party at the Pacific Electric station, corner of Sixth and Main streets, and they were then given an opportunity for a brief period of rest before the exercises of the evening.

One of the pleasing features of the day occurred during the forenoon when D. W. Kirkland, a confirmed old bachelor and president of the Owl Drug Company, could not resist the array of pretty girls who rode past his establishment, and presented "sweets to the sweet," giving to each lady of the party a pretty bottle of choice perfume.

PARTY'S PERSONNEL.

Only two of those who took part in the Times contest were prevented from enjoying the delights of the day. These were George H. Webb of Covina, who was taken sick during the contest, and is still in ill health; the other was John Overholtzer, also of Covina. The contestants who were members of the excursion party were: Gertrude Pedelty, Santa Ana; Jeannette Bower, Pasadena; Gertrude Hibbard, Pomona; Pearl Ellis, Whittier; Manuel E. Saens, The Palms; Elizabeth Dehmlow, Clearwater; Florence Darch, 463 East Thirty-second street; Winifred Beckingsale, Ontario; Georgia A. Pitts, Redlands; Clare Templeton, Lamanda; Porter Blackburn, Gardena; Vada Watson, 925 Birch street; Hazel M. Ball, Santa Ana; Mabel Brown, Gilegroye; Ethel Bryan, 721 Ottawa street; Lucille Zander, 639 West Sixteenth street; Blanche Marble, Soldiers' Home; C. Hix Thornburg, Long Beach; Soh Sanz Nan, 413½ North Los Angeles street; Stella Callender, 141½ North Broadway; Ines Lynn, 1136 West Thirty-ninth street; Josephine Den, 119B North Olive street; Bessie Barclay, 1231 South Main street; Julietta D. Campbell, 1117 Court street; Martha M. Gore, San Dimas; Aubrey St. Clair, 228 South Griffin avenue; Richard Sedwell, Fernando; Cecil Paull, Artesia; Hannah T. Thompson, Pasadena; John Harnish, 1238 West Thirty-ninth; Harry Bunnell, 2005 Magnolia avenue; G. Haven Bishop, Redlands; Charlie Yorba, 549 South Main; Lewis H. Nolan, Long Beach; Will L. Baughman, 164 North Avenue 21; Grace Langdon, Sherman; Wilson Turner, 1015 Mignonette street; Gladys Mae Wilson, 536 South Figueroa; Alva Harshman.

Besides these, there were probably a half-dozen special friends of the contestants, and members of last year's contest, who had been making special efforts for some candidate this year. Among these were Miss M. Ella J. Lane of Compton, who had been working hard for the interests of Miss Elizabeth Dehmlow; Miss Belle Campbell, who had been supporting the candidacy of Miss Stella Callender, and Miss Mary O'Shea, who had done much good work for Miss Josephine Den.

AWARD OF PRIZES.

Blanchard Hall was packed to the doors last night when the moment came to start the actual cash and scholarships flowing into the hands of the successful contestants in the Times contest of 1903. Friends of The Times and the young people who occupied the platform awaiting the reward of their long endeavor kept crowding in until additional rows of seats were spread almost to the front of the platform.

Great applause broke forth when Gen. Otis appeared upon the platform simultaneously with the winner of the race, Miss Gertrude Pedelty of Santa Ana. The president and general manager of The Times-Mirror Company made a few remarks, touching upon the object of the gathering, and characterizing the lately-closed contest as the most spirited, determined and thorough one yet. He commended the good feeling that has been shown among the contestants, and their integrity, and proceeded to the business of the evening by remarking that attention would be turned immediately to a more substantial and probably more generally agreeable matter than mere words—the conferring of awards.

Thereupon the gold coin began to rattle in the gripsack of Cashier Pfaffinger, seated on the platform by the side of Scholarship Manager Livengood, and the latter began to line up the envelopes containing the scholarship prizes. These, with the cash prizes, were dispensed to the contestants by Gen. Otis, who introduced each claimant as he or she stepped forward.

The friends of Miss Pedelty, the leader of them all, greeted her vociferously as she received the $250 in gold with which she hopes to see herself through the course at the Los Angeles State Normal School, which she is already following. As the winner's school connections were announced, the Normal School yell suddenly resounded through the room, "shot off" by a band of her fellow-students. Miss Pedelty modestly but sincerely thanked first The Times-Mirror Company for affording her the opportunity to aid herself so materially, and secondly the many friends whose help saw her over the finish line first.

Principal Pierce of the Normal School was called upon for a few words, and said, in part:

"This is an inspiring moment and theme, for all are gathered here in the interest of this crowd of budding students. There are three great educational influences at work under our present civilization—the church, the school and the newspaper, and when the greatest newspaper in Southern California joins hands with the schools, the greatest possible results are to be looked for. I am naturally proud that one of our own scholars should have won this strenuous and honorable contest, and I congratulate Miss Pedelty, the Times-Mirror Company and the Los Angeles Normal School on the result of the race."

Next came, amid applause, the pretty Pasadena young lady Miss Jeannette Bower, second prize winner. At the announcement that the envelope handed her along with her $150 in gold, contained her admission to a year's course at the Brownberger School, the Brownsberger yell was let loose with a vengeance from a body of students from that institution. After partial quiet had been regained, Miss Bower made a few well directed remarks in appreciation of the gifts she had received and the help of her friends.

Mrs. Florida Brownsberger responded on behalf of the school, and said that by the pluck she has already shown Miss Bower has given ample evidence of what an excellent student she will be.

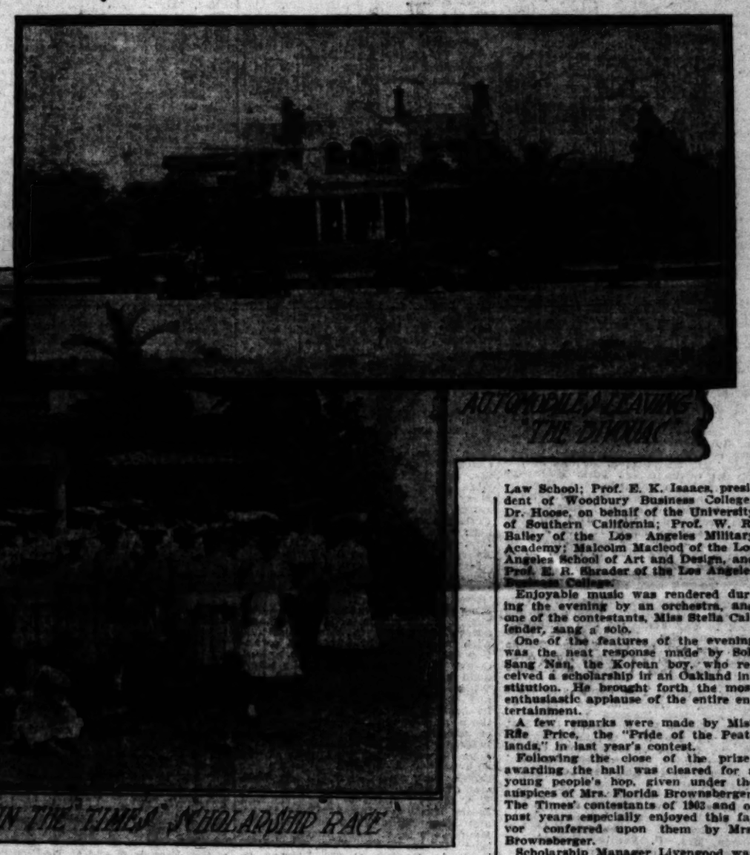
Just at this juncture the announcement that The Times had decided to give ten more scholarships than at first promised, brought out a burst of applause, after Miss Gertrude Hibbard of Pomona, third in the race, received her $125 cash prize and a scholarship in Pomona College. She graciously thanked all concerned for the favors received.

Next came Miss Pearl Ellis of Whittier, who received $110 and a scholarship in Occidental College, and following her came sturdy Señor Don Manuel E. Saens of The Palms. This young gentleman had a host of friends in the house, who gave him a hearty greeting. After him came Miss Elizabeth Dehmlow of Clearwater, who chose a scholarship in Woodbury Business College, and received $90 cash prize. She too, had many friends in the audience, and responded neatly. Miss Florence Darch was the seventh to step forward, and after receiving her $80 and a year's course at Throop Institute, gained another round of applause by a graceful reply. President Edwards of Throop responded briefly.

Miss Winifred Beckingsale of Ontario was then introduced, and received her $70 prize, followed by Miss Clare Templeton of Lamanda, who received $50.

This closed the list of cash prize contestants, and, following them in long succession came the procession of thrice their number who, although they did not win any gold, secured valuable scholarships. Vigorous applause greeted each one, and Miss Vada Watson, the colored contestant, was especially fortunate in this regard.

Others who spoke on behalf of the schools concerned in the contest were Dean Hammack of the Los Angeles Law School; Prof. E. K. Isaacs, president of Woodbury Business College; Dr. Hoose, on behalf of the University of Southern California; Prof. W. R. Bailey of the Los Angeles Military Academy; Malcolm Macleod of the Los Angeles School of Art and Design, and Prof. E. R. Shrader of the Los Angeles



THE CONTESTANTS IN THE "TIMES" SCHOLARSHIP RACE

AUTOMOBILE LEAVING THE BIVOUAC

Enjoyable music was rendered during the evening by an orchestra, and one of the contestants, Miss Stella Callender, sang a solo.

One of the features of the evening was the neat response made by Soh Sang Nan, the Korean boy, who received a scholarship in an Oakland institution. He brought forth the most enthusiastic applause of the entire entertainment.

A few remarks were made by Miss Rie Price, the "Pride of the Peatlands," in last year's contest.

Following the close of the prize-awarding the hall was cleared for a young people's hop, given under the auspices of Mrs. Florida Brownsberger. The Times' contestants of 1903 and of past years especially enjoyed this favor conferred upon them by Mrs. Brownsberger.

Scholarship Manager Livengood was presented by the contestants with a handsome testimonial before he left the platform.

NEW DORMITORY.

Great Improvements to be Made at the South Pasadena Home for Orphans and Abandoned Children.

The board of trustees of the Boys' and Girls' Aid Society, with a home located at South Pasadena, yesterday accepted the bid of a contractor to erect a boys' dormitory at a cost of about $14,000. The new structure will be three stories high, modern in every particular, and will accomodate seventy-five boys. As soon as possible the corner-stone will be laid, and the building dedicated to the memory of the late J. C. Salisbury, who was for many years president of the society. Of the sum necessary to complete the new and imposing structure, $12,000, is in hand, the balance being accumulated by careful management and by a donation made by the one whose memory they propose to commemorate. The remaining $2000 they feel satisfied will be speedily forthcoming from the generous people of Southern California.

When the present board of trustees was elected last April they promised to relieve the over-crowded condition of the home, and also to rescue it from the neglected and unsanitary condition into which it had fallen.

They have kept their promise by improving, remodeling and overhauling the present building from basement to attic, have replaced old bedding and furniture with new, and made many other marked improvements.

At the present time they are caring for eighty-five children, and are daily refusing to receive more on account of the crowded condition of the home.

PARK BAND MUSIC.

The following concert programme will be given in Eastlake Park this afternoon:

March, "My Alamo Love," (new) (Hearts:); waltz, "La Barcarolle" (Waldteufel;) selection, "The Tenderfoot" (Hearts,) from Carle and Hearts's musical play (all the go in the East;) (a) "I'm Wearing My Heart away for You" (new) (Charles K. Determined.

"My brother is very much hurt that you should refuse to correspond with him," said Mr. Chellusman's sister. "By failing to answer his many letter you wrong him, although, perhaps, you do not mean to."

"No," replied Miss Jilt. "I do not mean to wrong him, neither do I mean to write him."—[Catholic Standard and Times.

WHERE IS THE DALLAS MAN?

Detectives After a Trade Exchange Faker.

Local Concern of Same Name Disclaims Connection.

Manager Phillips, Operating Here, Has Strong Indorsements From Merchants.

Where is C. H. McLean?

That is the question of moment with Texas detectives and numerous duped merchants of Dallas. They have been hunting for McLean in Los Angeles.

For a brief season McLean operated in the southern city as manager of the Merchants' Trade Exchange, "flourishing like the green bay tree." Then "his place knew him no more." With his departure, cash collected as membership fees also disappeared, and creditors sat in sackcloth and ashes, repenting the confidence reposed in an unsecured stranger whose strong lead was the collection of bad debts.

Then the detectives took a hand. Among other tips, one from Los Angeles prompted an official trip to this city. C. W. Phillips had branched out here as manager of the Merchants' Trade Exchange, claiming his home office at Boston and a branch at Dallas. In an effort to ascertain the standing of the exchange, Secretary Zeehandelaar, of the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association communicated with Dallas with the result that officers immediately concluded that McLean, under another name, had opened up in Los Angeles. The fact that both concerns used the same business card led to this belief.

But Phillips says he is not McLean, and now has no connection with eastern branches, having bought out the exchange interests on this Coast.

Since commencing operations here, Mr. Phillips has secured considerable business, and declares his purpose of continuing as long as his clients retain their confidence in him. To a Times reporter he made the following statement yesterday:

"I am perfectly in sympathy with The Times' efforts to stop the faking that is going on, for I have to deal with beats of various sorts myself, but the article of last week has done me some harm among the newer clients, who have not yet become acquainted with our business methods. The older ones are well enough pleased.

"The Merchants' Trade Exchange works on much the same plan as other mercantile agencies. It has correspondents in various parts of the country and if it has an account to collect in any given town it does it through its office, or representative in that city. There are many enterprises of this sort in existence, many of them well known. Personally, all I have is in my business, and I have never had its integrity questioned before. We do business on a membership basis, as The Times stated, and have about 150 members or subscribers here. I have bought the rights of the organization which preceded mine, and hold them on the Pacific Coast."

Mr. Phillips says the first he knew of the Boston and Dallas offices being closed was from The Times, and that if McLean has brought the Merchants' Trade Exchange name into disrepute he hopes McLean will receive his just deserts.

GOOD INDORSEMENT.

In support of his claim, Manager Phillips offers the following indorsement:

LOS ANGELES (Cal.)
Aug. 28, 1903.

To whom it may concern: We, the undersigned, take pleasure in stating that we are subscribers to the Merchants' Trade Exchange of 429-430 Copp building, and that we heartily approve and indorse their methods of collecting bad accounts. Their way of forcing the debtor to settle with the creditor has proved most efficient, and prompts us to recommend them most heartily to the business people of Los Angeles: Conservative Life Insurance Company, per Thomas B. Inch, treasurer; J. R. Newberry Co., per George E. Burrall, secretary; Tanner Drug Co., by E. G. B. Dunbar, secretary; William H. Hoegee Co., per Murdock; Globe Woolen Company, per A. Granas; Morgan Oyster Co., per O. C. Morgan, manager; H. Arnold, Furniture and Carpets; Southern California Printing Company, per Ben Cartwright, manager; A. T. Cummings, plumber; Bennett-Call Electric Co.; Green Marshall Paint Co., per J. L. M.; Eastern Outfitting Company, A. Sieroty; Argeal Manufacturing and Jobbing Company, by L. M. Passmore; W. H. Spinks, dentist; E. Schmidt, tailor; Los Angeles Cloth and Trimming Company; Hart and Goetze, tailors; H. C. Ackley, manager Wheeler and Wilson Sewing Machine Co.; R. B. Moorehead, manager New Home Sewing Machine Co.; Nauerth Hardware Co.; H. C. Mayor, treasurer; The W. W. Sweeney Co., Inc., per C. W. Brown, secretary; Paul Breese, M.D.; Breese Bros., undertakers; Angevine Woolen Co.

MISTAKE OF PHILLIPS.

Despite the above indorsement, Secretary Zeehandelaar of the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association, is insistent upon the facts as they exist. In referring to the matter yesterday he said:

"I have ascertained that many of the merchants doing business with the trade exchange have secured good results, so that should there be a loss of membership fees they would have no complaint to make. The fact remains, however, that when Phillips commenced operations here he represented that the home office was at Boston, and that there was a branch at Dallas, Tex. At that time there was no such company operating in Boston, and the Dallas manager had skipped. Furthermore, when seeking subscribers here, letters and recommendations from Dallas merchants were used as evidence of the company's standing and credibility."

WANTED FOR CHEATING.

Detectives are still on the warpath after McLean. It is reported that he has been seen here. He is wanted for cheating by false pretenses, he having claimed to represent a Boston concern with officers duly set forth, when there was no such concern in existence. The end is not yet.

EVENTS IN SOCIETY.

ALMOST unique pre-nuptial afternoon was given by Miss Frances Barber last Saturday afternoon in honor of Miss Cornelia Richert, whose engagement to Charles Poindexter was recently announced. The afternoon was spent in hemming table linen for the bride-to-be, and as a prize for having accomplished the most work, Miss Fuller was awarded a dainty silk work bag. At 5 o'clock a delicious repast was served in the dining-room, which had been appropriately decorated for the occasion.

In the center of the table, surrounded by flowers, was a doll's trunk, ornamented with hearts and wedding bells, white satin bows, old shoes and witty signs. When opened by Miss Richert with the key, which she found at her plate, this trunk was found to contain a gift from each of the young ladies present. The place cards were covered with rice, and upon each was a nonsense rhyme, original with the hostess, containing some joke about the guest for whom it was intended.

Those present were Mrs. Charles Alden Bishop, Misses Cornelia Richert, Edna Bumiller, Bird Burck, Jessie Hall, Stella Bumiller, Sabina Burks and Ethel Fuller.

This was the first of a number of functions which are to be given complimentary to Miss Richert before her marriage in October.

Long Beach.

EVERYTHING of a social nature was overshadowed last week by the veterans' encampment. They have had an entertainment in the big tent every evening and several of the afternoons they have furnished about all the entertainment there was needed. In addition to this the opening of High School furnished occupation for the younger set. About the only attempts at social gatherings have been on the boats. Several large parties have made the trip to Catalina and several more have made excursions to Portugese Bend and other picnic grounds in this vicinity. Many of these have been progressive euchres, however. The annual fall change in visitors is becoming apparent, the transitory summer contingent making way for the winter's more permanent crowd.

The Misses Mae and June Weatherhalt of Los Angeles have been visiting Long Beach friends and stopping at the Rivera.

Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Catus and Mrs. M. B. Dorland make up a party of Chicago people who are taking in the Coast.

Judge Curtis D. Wilbur has been visiting with friends at the beach during the past week.

Redondo.

ALTHOUGH a large number of visitors have left the beach, the decrease in population is hardly perceptible. The Redondo Hotel still continues to have a large number of guests and all the cottages are filled, many being leased until into the winter. The season has been about the liveliest in the history of Redondo.

There was a social gathering Saturday evening at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. G. V. Dunn, in honor of the birthday anniversary of their son Arthur. About seventy-five guests were entertained, the feature of the evening being the music furnished by Miss Louise Coulter. Refreshments were served and dancing closed the celebration in the wee hours.

A watermelon social was held at the Congregational Church Saturday evening. An excellent programme was rendered by members of the congregation, after which all did justice to the melons in the banquet room.

Mrs. H. B. Ainsworth gave a farewell party Monday evening at the Redondo Hotel in honor of Col. and Mrs. Greenleaf, who have spent the summer at the hotel. Progressive euchre was the principal feature of amusement. Those in the party were Mr. and Mrs. George Gage, Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Ainsworth, Mr. and rMs. Kingsbury, Mr. and Mrs. E. SAD AFFAIR AT SPOOKTOWN.

A novel episode occurred at the Mineral Park Spiritualists' Convention last evening. It was during the séance of one of the sisters in a private tent, where among the assembled crowd of spectators, or customers, who had paid the admission fee was an Antelope Valley Democrat. This bearded veteran, according to his appearance, ought to have known better. Various persons called for relatives, and, as wives, children and husbands were requested, and shadowy visions flitted across the large white screen at the end of the tent, these, to the prejudiced, had great resemblance to the departed ones, many of whom had left this earth years ago, and of whom the relatives had a more or less obscure recollection; but all were gratified, and all was going well, when this ancient of days, this jay from Antelope Valley shouted, "William Jennings Bryan."

Immediately arose the long neck and body of the defunct ostrich, "W. J. Bryan," who three weeks ago passed away at the ostrich farm just in the vicinity. The medium was equal to this, as to all other occasions, and explained to the audience the sad incident, which resulted in renewed confidence in the powers of the wonderful female medium, who could thus bring spirits from "the vasty deep."

Schwab's Rise.

It has been understood that Mr. Schwab, as president of the United States Steel Corporation, was receiving the largest salary paid to any man in the United States. According to current report, this salary has included $100,000 as a stated sum per annum, with, in addition, an amount based upon the year's profits of the corporation. Mr. Schwab has been president of the steel corporation since its organization, in the spring of 1903. He was the right-hand man of Andrew Carnegie in the Carnegie Steel Company, and Wall street understood at the time the big steel combination was formed that it was largely through the influence of Mr. Carnegie that Mr. Schwab was selected to head he combination in the executive capacity. He is only a little more than 40 years old. His first business experience was when he became a grocer's boy at $2.50 a week, at the age of 17. Two months later he got a place as stake driver in the engineering department of the Edgar Thomson Steel Works, receiving $1 a day.

Six months later he became superintendent of the works. He took charge of the building of eight of the nine blast furnaces that the plan now has. He was appointed superintendent of the Homestead Works in 1887, when he was 25 years old. Under him these works were reconstructed and made the largest in the world of their class. In 1889 he became general superintendent of the Edgar Thomson Works, and the Homestead Works also were put under him three years later. He was made president of the Carnegie Steel Company in February, 1897, when he was 35 years old, his salary being fixed at $50,000 a year, with an interest in the business. The value of this interest increased enormously and with the merging of the Carnegie company into the United States Steel Corporation, Mr. Schwab became a very rich man.—[New York Sun.

WHERE THE BURDEN FALLS.

The Times publishes elsewhere in this morning's issue a communication written to Assistant District Attorney Rand of New York by the mother of a workman who has long been idle because of the strike which has for some months tied up the building trades in that city. The letter is a most pathetic exposition of a phase of the unwritten history of the strike. It is a part of the inner history, not only of the New York building-trades strike, but of all great strikes which are prolonged to any extent.

In all industrial controversies of large proportions, the immediate participants in the strike are not the principal sufferers. As has often been pointed out in these columns, the blow falls with most crushing weight upon those who are dependent on the striking workmen for their daily bread. The wives, the mothers, the children—who are forced to live as best they can in the homes made desolate through the wanton acts of labor agitators and their dupes—these are the persons who chiefly bear the brunt of the conflicts waged by "organized labor." Their sufferings are all the more pitiful because they are usually unrecorded and unexpressed. Those who suffer are forced to suffer in silence, partly through fear and partly through pride. The truth appears only when the veil is lifted, as in the case above cited, wherein a starving mother tells in simple but touching language of her own sufferings and of the sufferings of others similarly situated.

This mother's story of want and sorrow is not isolated nor unusual. It is only one of thousands upon thousands which might be told, and which would be told if the victims of Jaramillo inhumanity were at liberty to speak freely, and to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. If such were the case, they would tell of women and children bending their backs under burdens too grievous to bear, in order that agitators and jawsmiths may strut their brief hour upon the stage and rob the striking workmen of the wages which should of right go to the support of their families.

If the pitiful inner history of labor strikes could be written and published to the world, the result would be such an arousing of public indignation and reprobation as would speedily put an end to these needless, indefensible, and often criminal, disturbances of the industrial peace. Public condemnation is withheld (when it is withheld) because the public does not know nor comprehend the extent of the calamity and the flagrancy of the wrongs inflicted. There is always systematic, deliberate, and wholesale concealment of the truth. Those who suffer most are afraid to tell the truth, or are deterred by considerations of pride, or mistaken expediency, from doing so.

The world will never know of the thousands and tens of thousands of patient, heroic women who have parsed through heart-wrecking struggles between wifely pride, wifely fear, and slow starvation. But/the world ought to know these things, for the good of the world, for the good of the sufferers themselves, and for the good of humanity in general. The plea of Mrs. Anderson, eloquent in its pathetic simplicity, raises the curtain, in part, affording a momentary glimpse of the harrowing scenes behind it—scenes which are typical of all prolonged labor strikes. The facts which she sets forth so unaffectedly, yet so effectively, ought to be published throughout the length and breadth of the land, in order that the great American public may know—and knowing, may govern itself accordingly.

The Tucson Star can see no good in the abusive attacks made by Delegate Smith, and Wilson, his successor, on Senator Bard, and wisely argues that the result is only new enemies for Arizona. It certainly would be just as well if the two states in question had been kept on their own side of the Hassayampa.

Another gay young highwayman has been sent up from Los Angeles for a twenty-year term in San Quentin, which goes to shew that we do land one of the miscreants once in a while.

A SCIENTIFIC BLUNDER.

The Scientific American is one of the leading journals of its kind in the world, and is usually regarded as being exceedingly conservative and accurate. Californians who have held this opinion must have read with surprise the issue of June 20, of which a correspondent has just sent us a couple of pages. One page is devoted to the subject of orange culture in California, with illustrations. The author of the article, after stating that "the citrous (sic) fruit" can be safely and profitably grown "along the foothills of the Sierra Madre Mountains (sic) from San Diego to Tehama counties, a distance of over 700 miles," says further, as follows: "The center of orange culture in California is Oroville, in Butte county, about 450 miles north of Los Angeles." Otherwise, there is nothing about the localities where oranges are raised, except a statement that "throughout the Sacramento and San Joachin (sic) valleys, orange trees are planted in bluffs of the foothills, in soil of a deep, gravelly porous nature." Not a word about the somewhat important orange-growing counties of San Bernardino, Riverside, Orange and Los Angeles. Oroville, by the way, is 524 miles from Los Angeles, by rail, not 450.

To show the absolute and glaring absurdity of such a statement as this, it is only necessary to say that of the coming orange crop of California, which is expected to reach 30,000 carloads, probably not more than 500 carloads will be shipped from the orange-growing section of Northern California, "of which Oroville is the center," about nine-tenths of the whole crop coming from the four southern counties of San Bernardino, Riverside, Orange and Los Angeles.

It is, indeed, a subject for legitimate surprise that a journal of such high standing as the Scientific American should permit itself to be duped into printing such a preposterous and absolutely false and misleading statement as this. Was it, perhaps, inspired by the California Promotion Committee, which appears to be determined to persist in trying to make people believe that there is no difference between the climates of Southern and Northern California, and that oranges may be grown as well north of the Tehachepi as in the south. Such statements are not true, and therefore any effect they produce can only be temporary, with an inevitable reaction, for "the truth is mighty and must prevail."

WHO CREATES THE WEALTH?

It is a frequent contention of socialistic and other classes of agitators that "the laborer creates all the wealth," and that he is, therefore, the rightful owner of it. This fallacious idea, industriously exploited and frequently reiterated, even by men of more than ordinary intelligence, has taken root in the minds of many superficial observers, who are unable or unwilling to separate the truth from the falsehood of this matter. It is the basis of much of the industrial unrest which is in evidence all over the country, and many strikers, who foolishly quit positions where they were receiving good wages and fair treatment, no doubt believe that even under these favorable conditions they are in some way, not fully understood by themselves, being systematically "robbed" by their employers.

John Stuart Mill, the well-known philosopher and economist, in beginning an address before an audience of laboring men in the city of London, said: "As I was coming into your hall a handsome carriage whirled by me, drawn by two white horses and driven by men in livery. Inside was a woman richly dressed. It passed rapidly up the hill and turned into the grounds of yonder palace. Who built that carri ? You did. Who reised the horses? You did. Who erected the palace and laid out that magnificent park? You did. Why should you not own them now?" When men of superior intelligence, like John Stuart Mill, talk in this way, is it surprising that men of duller intellects readily accept the idea that they have been made the victims of a colossal wrong, and that they are systematically robbed and plundered by those who have been more fortunate than themselves in the struggle for existence?

To any man of average intelligence, the fact is plain enough that no man who owns a thing and sells it, continues to own it. The carriage and the palace referred to by John Stuart Mill, in the sentences above quoted, were built by laboring men, but each and every man whose labor contributed toward the final result was paid for his labor. Having exchanged for money the labor that went into the work, he no longer had an interest in it, and the finished product belonged by right and by law to the man who had bought and paid for the materials and the labor which entered into its composition. And, in this connection, the important fact should be remembered that out of the total cost of the articles in question, not less than ninety per cent., at a conservative estimate, was labor cost. This is true of the vast majority of products fabricated by the hand of man. The principal cost of all such products, from the raw material lying untouched beneath the surface of the earth, or above it, to the highest elaboration of the finished product, is cost incurred through the payment of labor for its share in the work of production. Thus, at all stages of the complex operations which result in the finished product, labor exacts and receives its due compensation, and therefore ceases to have any further ownership interest in the things produced.

Discussing this question in a recent issue of American Industries, W. A. Croffut makes some strong points in favor of the man who thinks as well as of the man who performs physical work. Mr. Croffut well says:

"Besides manual laborers and machine tenders there is another class of producers immeasurably more important than both of these, who are hardly ever alluded to at all in discussions of the labor question. The tool with which this class works is ingenuity. Ingenuity at the present time produces at least five times as much as labor does, demonstrating the immense superiority of the brain to the brawn. I use the word 'ingenuity' not only as defining the motive power of an Edison, a Morse, an Ericsson, a Bell, a Marconi, but that of the great captains of industry, like Vanderbilt, Scott, Garrett, Armour, Hill, Carnegie, the directors of the iron mills, cotton factories, steamships and railroads, who by their sagacity vastly increase the products of the muscle and the machinery which they employ.

"All the men of active brain, not only those who fill the Patent Office with mechanical marvels, but those who invent a more economical way of doing things, and devise short cuts between the producer and the consumer, all belong to this class of benefactors of the race.

"This factor in production it is which enables us to buy clothing and furniture for one-half what the same things cost fifty years ago; to go to California in six days when it used to cost six months and a tragedy; to go to Europe for $30 in five days, when it used to cost six months and a fortune; to ride from Georgetown to the Navy Yard in Washington for 5 cents, which fifty years ago it cost a dollar or two; to dress three times as well and comfortably as the average employee of fifty years ago; to have carpets on our floors and curtains at our windows, which in our fathers' time were attainable only by the wealthy."

The question as to who actually produces the steadily increasing surplus of manufactured products is thus ably and convincingly answered by Mr. Croffut:

"Investigation shows that in 1840 each 10,000,000 of our poulation produced $625,000,000, or $62.50 per head; in 1890, each 10,000,000 produced $1,500,000,000, or $150 a head, two and a half times as much. What is the cause of this great increase in production? Obviously it is not labor, as such, for instead of working harder the laborers of the present generation do not work nearly so hard nor so long at those of 1840. The work is not nearly so disagreeable, and the hours of labor are ten, eight and nine, instead of fourteen and sixteen, as they then were.

"Now, if it is not labor that makes the difference, what is it? What element or factor in our industrial system is it which produces nearly $1,000,000,000 surplus per year with the same number of workmen? Obviously it is sagacity or ingenuity—whatever we please to call that combination of nerve and brain, of forecast and audacity, which more than doubles the product. The aggregate of machinery in the United States is equal to the combined effort of 800,000,000 men, and the result of the superintendence of labor which produces profit by preventing waste and introducing economic methods is probably equal to as many more.

"The net conclusion from this calculation is that if the capitalists of the United States could be abolished the laboring men would virtually be reduced to penury. For there would be nobody to pay them and the ex-capitalists would have to join their ranks, vastly increasing their numbers. In having wages doubled in the last thirty years, while the price of almost every commodity has declined, the laborers of America are better off today in dollars and cents and in the purchasing power of dollars and cents than they would have been if in 1870 the entire wealth of the nation had been confiscated and divided up among them. And if the dream of Utopian socialists could be realized and all the property of every kind could be divided up equally among the people of the United States today, the workingmen of the country would not have so much property as their children will have in thirty years from now by the automatic operation of the beneficent system of competition which has enriched and blessed this generation."

Our old friend the Sultan of Turkey says that the detestable deeds against his dominions are engineered by foreign enemies. We have an idea that the Sultan's assertion is about on a par with the statement made some time ago that the American press had been bribed with Turkish gold to suppress approving expressions regarding the Macedonian cause. The wily old boss of the Ottoman empire cannot blame us for any part of his troubles. If his seat is too warm to sit on we haven't built any fire under it.

An advertising medium that is good enough for the alert and aggressive merchants of Los Angeles ought to be good enough for the Board of Supervisors of Los Angeles county. If publicity is what they want it is through the columns of The Times that they can get it, but if they are advertising merely as a matter of form it would be just as well to insert same in the Bungtown Banner, and let it go at that.

The tuna is a fish with his own peculiar sense of humor. He went back to Avalon in swarms, the other day, entirely out of season, and caught all the old fishermen napping. Thereupon the tigers of the sea merely gobbled up a few thousand unfortunate flying fish, shook their tails in derision at the dumfounded sports on shore and then disappeared once more into the dark recesses of the fathomless deep.

A MOTHER'S PLEA.

Parks and His Ilk Lead Many to Starvation.

[New York Evening Sun August 27.] Mrs. Anderson, mother of a workman who has long been idle because of the building tie-up, today sent the following letter to Asst. Dist.-Atty. Rand:

"Permit me to thank you for your able and conscientious conducting of the trial of that man Sam Parks, so called delegate of several unions. I wonder if for the minute some of those men—they ought to be called brutes—ever realize the extent of such a man's misdeeds when they place him in power over workingmen and let him dictate when and where they shall work. Did it occur to you that he has actually been placed in power to starve workmen's families at his will, as well as cause untold misery and suffering to women and children, through his base grasping for money—to get it without working for it? He has at this day thousands of women and children, families of skilled mechanics, literally starving and suffering as much here as though they lived in the coal regions last winter. For over three months some of these workmen have been idle. Some have big families and all must live. How, in God's name, are we to get food when the men are forced into idleness? Some of them are forced into destroying their lives, either literally or by becoming idle drinkers—for they can get drinks always, but not food for their babies. And while those who should be our supporters and protectors are idle and being dominated by a few stronger-minded self-constituted dictators called delegates, mothers, wives, children are fighting the wolf at the door, suffering humiliations and bread hunger and want of every kind, which it would be impossible to describe to those who have not been in such a condition.

"The American workman prides himself upon his independence, while I think he is simply showing himself the most abject being one can imagine to let a few delegates rule his work, to wreck his life, his home and family. Sam Parks, sir, and his crime consist not so much in taking the money offered him or in asking for it from some one who had it, but his most cruel, brutish acts consisted in taking the bread out of the mouths of the workmen and their families. His methods of gambling with the workmen's lives and means are far blacker and more deserving of the prison than the few hundred thousand of dollars ill gotten from those men who had it to spare, or they would not have given it to him. My life, as well as my poor little dependent grandchildren, are but few of the many who have suffered through him. If all the workmen's families would come, and tell their tales of want and suffering, your heart would bleed with pity, and you would make greater effort to send Sam Parks and more of his stamp to State's prison. Your effort to do so is certainly what they want it is through the columns of The Times that they can get it, but if they are advertising merely as a matter of form it would be just as well to insert same in the Bungtown Banner, and let it go at that.

"Now, if it is not labor that makes the difference, what is it? Taken at His Word.

"Mr. Gruff," began the caller, "I don't want to disturb you—"

"Very considerate of you to come in here just to tell me that," said the busy merchant. "I appreciate it, Sir. Good day."—[Philadelphia Press.

Important Figures About the Trade in Iron.

Our Shoe Trade in South America Increasing—Business in the Old Countries.

BY J. D. WHELPLEY.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31.—The United States now leads the world in the iron industry. This is shown in a report made to his government by Sir A. E. Bateman, president of the statistical department of the Board of Trade of the British empire. This report has been received by the Department of Commerce in Washington and is most complete in its figures and comparisons. Necessarily the elaborate character of the report has made it impossible to include the figures for 1902. The period covered by the report is the twelve years from 1890 to 1901 inclusive.

The total output of iron ore in the world in 1901 was between 85,000,000 and 90,000,000 tons, the principal producers being the United States, Germany, the United Kingdom and Spain, in the order given. These countries account for about three-fourths of the total output of the world. Russia, France, Germany, Austria-Hungary, Sweden and Belgium are the other iron and steel producing countries. While yielding the greatest amount of iron ore gross, the United States is by no means the largest producer per capita. The per capita production of Sweden is .54 of a ton of iron ore. The per capita production of Spain is .43. The United States comes next with .37. The next in order are the United Kingdom with .39 of a ton per capita and Germany with .29. The per capita production of the other countries on the list is comparatively small.

There has been a notable increase of iron ore production in the past three years in the United States and Sweden. All of the other countries show a shortage, the most marked decrease being in the United Kingdom and Germany. The figures of consumption for each of these countries show that the United States, the United Kingdom and Belgium are the countries of large production where the consumption exceeds the native product. Relative to its population, the weight of iron ore consumed in the United Kingdom is greater than in any other country, the United States taking second and Germany the third place in this respect.

The United States is sixth on the list in the production of pig iron per capita, occupying the same place in the table as does Russia. In 1901 the production of pig iron was not so great in Germany or in the United Kingdom as in the previous year. Hitherto the German production has increased year by year, especially during the last few years, and is now necessarily as great as that of the United Kingdom. The United States has made no important advance in production until the last five years. In that period the progress made has been more remarkable than that of Germany.

In the manufacture of steel the United States leads the world, the production per capita being .17 tons. The United Kingdom comes next with .13 tons. The figures for 1902, as compiled by the Bureau of Statistics of Washington, show an enormous increase in this country in the production of pig iron and the manufacture of steel. In 1902 the United States produced 40 per cent. of the world's iron and steel and the United States, Great Britain and Germany produced 78 per cent. of the world's total product.

The general effect of the Bateman report is to show that the United Kingdom is losing ground in this line of industry and that the United States, Germany and Sweden, notably the first named, are making remarkable progress.

Consul-General Hanauer of Frankfort reports a tremendous effort on the part of the Russians to increase their export trade, notably in the line of cotton and iron manufactures. Agricultural implements are also being pushed in every direction and the Russian government takes an immense interest in the promotion of Russian industries, sustaining them by liberal monetary grants, transportation facilities and in various other ways.

Notwithstanding a recent boycott declared by the shoemakers of Bogota against goods of American manufacture, Consul-General Snyder of that place reports American trade to be making decided gains. Consul Snyder, however, warns the American exporters that they are now in danger of losing this valuable market through carelessness on their part. He says: "If our merchants and manufacturers would confine themselves to shipping a good, medium quality of shoe, thereby cultivating the market and giving some thought to their customers; in other words, finding out the desires and wants of the people, and not trusting to statements of merchants here, their standing on the market would become so firm that there would be no chance of their losing it, for there can be no doubt of the growing popularity of American shoes.

"On the other hand, instead of improving their favorable hold on the market by shipping the class of shoes referred to, the merchants here have imported very recently a class of rubbish and cheap stuff, the manufacturers congratulating themselves, likely, at having gotten rid of the goods and the merchants here at having made their profits, neither giving thought to the injury that will result in future therefrom in this profitable market. Unfavorable comment has already arisen and one result has been the boycott mentioned."

Consul Danziger writes from Madrid to the effect that while American trade is making good progress in Spain, the European manufacturers sell their goods below American prices and extend longer credits. Complaint is also made that the American manufacturer treats the Spanish dealer with evident lack of faith and respect. The Consul says: "I cannot emphasize too strongly the fact that Spanish merchants are, as a rule, honest and take pride in the perpetuity of their houses. They are, therefore, afraid of the shadow of a dishonest act, and if they pay slowly they pay none the less surely. I would, therefore, urge American manufacturers to come into this market boldly and generously."

The figures compiled by the Bureau of Statistics show that the United States export trade to Spain is slowly but appreciably gaining ground, and that in 1902 there was an increase in imports into Spain amounting to nearly 25 per cent. over the year before.

Consul Kehl of Stettin, Germany thinks that the market for American brooms, shoes, cloth, furniture, bench tools, and agricultural implements could be widely extended in his neighborhood.

Writing from Munich, Germany, Consul-General Worman says that the export of bicycles from Germany shows a remarkable increase during the past year, the total foreign trade of Germany in this line of goods now exceeding that of the United States or the United Kingdom. These German bicycles are sold mostly throughout Western Europe, the Netherlands being the largest purchaser, with Denmark a close second. Great Britain buys a larger number of German bicycles, the shipments during 1902 largely exceeding those of the previous year.

Consul Jackson, at La Rochelle, France, deprecates the apparent lack of effort on the part of American exporters to introduce into France certain vegetable products which are very plentiful in the United States and practically unknown in his part of the world. He refers particularly to corn, peanuts, oats and wheat for table use, and sweet potatoes. He also adds American fresh fruits. He says the French people know nothing about white and yellow corn meal. Small quantities of Scotch oatmeal find their way to the larger towns. Crushed or broken wheat is not used at all, and has hardly been heard of. The sweet potato is better known, but not generally used. Those imported come from Spain.

The Consul thinks that there should be a lot of earnest and practical advertising, not only in periodicals, but by the organization of kitchens and restaurants in which these articles could be served at moderate prices. He concludes that the attempt to do this at Paris during the exposition of 1900 was a failure because the number of French people reached by this method was comparatively few. He calls the attention of the American fruit growers to the fact that American fruits are scarce in France. He refers to dried, canned and fresh fruits. American prunes and dried apples are in strong favor, but the opportunities for placing dried apples are still many. California and tinned fruits are found in many large stores, but are unknown generally and very dear in price. "What is needed for the development of the trade in these goods, dried as well as canned," says the Consul, "is direct relations in order to avoid the large commissions which are lucrative to the agent to a certain degree, but ruinous to the trade."

The lumber markets of the Orient and the share which the United States is likely to have in supplying them is a subject which is now attracting the attention of the United States government. The Bureau of Statistics recently published a report of American Consuls in the East which announces the arrival of the first cargo of lumber in the Chinese market brought by a Russian vessel from Vladivostock. This has opened the question of future competition for the oriental market between the American lumber interests on the Pacific Coast on the one hand and that of the Russians in Siberia and on the Yalu River on the other. In both places enormous resources are awaiting development. The American industry of the Pacific Coast has the advantage of organization on a large scale and of a mechanical equipment unequaled by that of any other field in the world.

The relative importance of foreign to domestic demands, so far as the Pacific Coast is concerned, is not easily ascertained. The principal mills in the State of Washington, however, report that in a single year about 30 per cent. of the output went to foreign markets and 70 per cent. to fill domestic and coastwise orders.

The American shoe is making strong headway in Germany in the matter of annual growth in the trade, but at the same time Consul-General Mason does not think that the importations of American goods of that character occupy as important a place in the German trade as they should. The American shoe trade in Germany is wholly the growth of the past four years, but a beginning has only been made. Berlin, Hamburg and Frankfort each have one distinctively American shoe store, all of which have been successful from the day they were first opened. There remains, however, nearly a score of important German cities which have no such establishment.

The import duty on an average pair of shoes runs from 12 to 20 cents, according to their weight. A new tariff law, which will go into effect next year, doubles the import duty on men's shoes and trebles it upon women's fine shoes, and the American Consul-General at Berlin urges consideration of some reciprocal arrangement with the United States so that this promising field for the American shoe trade can be developed to its full possibilities.

The development of Rhodesia in Africa is attracting lively interest in Europe at this particular time, and from the progress now being made in opening up the resources of that country it can be assumed that Rhodesia will, in the near future, become a decided factor among districts contributing to the export trade of the world. In a single year 1240 miles of new railway have been opened; the output of coal has doubled and new discoveries of gold, copper, lead, zinc and coal are reported. The railroad mileage is now over two thousand miles, or greater than that of the Transvaal. Orange River Colony and Natal combined. Immense deposits of coal have been determined and the soil and climate of the country are adapted to the cultivation of grain, cotton and tobacco. The gold output now reaches about $5,000,000 per annum.

THE Eagle Bird notices frequent references by the alarmists to the possible extinction of the Anglo-Saxon race because of the falling off in the child crop. It pains me considerably to have to take issue with our great and good and strenuous President, and others, but I'll do it if it does hurt me.

Say, fellows, is there one among you who would swap a Lou Dillon for a whole corral full of mustangs? I'll bet you wouldn't. What we want in this country, and in all the other Anglo-Saxon countries, is more thoroughbreds and fewer mustangs. The human mustang is just as much a cumberer of the ground, if not more so, than the hoss of that ilk. It has been said many times by a heap smarter people than this Eagle Bird who is now offering these few remarks on the race suicide question, that we don't need more people in the world, but more people of the right kind. The loafers and no-accounts are jostling each other off the sidewalk all over this great country of ours, but if there is an overplus of human thoroughbreds I haven't seen them meandering about under this perch. Of course there can never be an overplus of thoroughbreds, but the country is loaded up to the guards with runts.

I want to tell you that it is a great night better to have one boy or girl in the family who is a Jim Dandy, than to have a house full of kids that are half-baked. One masterful lass or lad is a whole team and a dog under the wagon compared with a family of youngsters, one of which is going to land in the penitentiary, later on, one become a horse jockey, another a prize fighter and the rest of the bunch sort of hanging around.

As to the evaporation of the Anglo-Saxon outfit, it will surely do just that very thing unless such of that race as there is to do business in the world are smarter than the other people. If the Anglo-Saxon man, or woman, isn't worth about three of any other breed of a man or woman he or she isn't up to the standard. We have too many children now, in this country, for the schoolhouses, and there are too many of those now attending who don't get enough of the many things that they ought to have. It is possible for the average man, and his wife, to bring up two children and give them a pretty good send off in the world, but when the old man has to hustle up grub for a regular old kindergarten he is biting off more than he can successfully masticate, as a rule.

Of course, I am not presumptuous enough to say that there aren't big families that are all right, from every point of view, for it does seem to me as if just enough babies are quite enough without pro... ing too many of them. In other days when man wanted but a few here below, and that was about all he got, it was all well enough to have a raft of little fellows to help earn and hoe potatoes, but now that there are machines to do the bulk of the hard work it is just as well to use steel and iron do the work of human brawn.

I say one but look about him and will be convinced that there is already too much crowding in the street cars, and in all the other places where people congregate. Why, fellows, the streets are literally filled up and hanging onto straps getting hipshot, as it were.

Say, fellows, we don't seem to need more people, but that there is a constantly growing demand for a better class of people than many who are in the habit of climbing porches, holding up street cars, burgling the premises of their neighbors and fellow-citizens and generally doing contemptible and unlawful things (you know as well as I do) that we have ample room everywhere for honest men and women of sense, loyalty, pluck, courage and integrity, but that the United States and outlying provinces are overstocked with misfits of the baser breed.

I am not clamoring for more people when there are thousands standing around railroad stations watching the other fellow doing the digging? Why want any piled up so full of people that they walk on each other's feet? Let some now in the jam are trying to get out and find a piece of quiet and some place where the birds are singing and the streams that go singing to the sea are stocked with fish? I want every last acre of land in this blooming nation settled up when we have having to set aside land for the reservoirs in order to have water enough for such improvements?

No, fellows, this clamoring for more people on the premises is all a mistake. In the other and olden times when a little went a long ways, wants were few and simple, crime rare, desires easily satisfied and happiness was reigning on every hand, it was all right to have rows of trundle beds under the full-sized beds on the floor, but in these piping times when the human creature has to hustle, and run over, it is just as well to gently refrain from increasing the size of the mob that is trying to crowd into the circus all at once.

What is the opinion up in Eagleville as to the future of the human race in dependent upon how many there are to answer roll call, but what is the character of the troops is who do the answering? The Eagle people have a notion that it is a blamed sight better to have one man to make a tailor of suit of clothes than to have a dozen being dished out without much regard to the size of the table in order to accommodate those who must have pie or not get any.

Say, fellows will look about you and see that you will see that the old

Let any one but look about him and he will be convinced that there is already too much crowding in the street cars, positively too many are now hanging up and hanging onto straps and getting hipshot, as it were.

Say, fellows, we don't seem to need more people, but that there is a constantly growing demand for a better class of people than many who are in the habit of climbing porches, holding up stores, burgling the premises of neighbors and fellow-citizens and generally doing contemptible and unspeakable things you know as well as I do. The Eagle people have a notion that it is a blamed sight better thing for one man to make a tailor of himself out of them. There is trouble enough being dished out without increasing the size of the table in order to accommodate those who must be fed or not get any.

Say, fellows will look about you and you will see that the old world down there where you all are doing your daily stunt is getting settled up quite as fast as it can stand without straining the harness. What with the doctors who are knocking the microbes out of the arena, one after the other, discovering germicides that do business while you wait, slaying the mosquitoes that formerly sowed disease in your midst, and the scientists who are curing things with purple lights, blue lights, yellow lights, red lights and other combined electrical and prismatic effects, it looks to us up here as if the time was nigh at hand when you all were going to live along indefinitely.

And then, mark you, there is another class of scientists at work on a scheme to produce life without any other ingredients than a bag of salt and a pitcher of rainwater. When those fellows get their business in order they are likely to so populate the world that there will be no occasion whatever for raising children. To be sure, they may not be able to improve on the Almighty's plan of peopling the planets, but until they have definitely given up trying it seems to us Eagleistic observers as if you ought to be a trifle careful about getting too busy with your baby shows.

That's the idea, then, fellows—let's not have so big a mob on the streets, but a handsomer and better-behaved one. Let's not clamor for a larger population until the one we have has been taught, or is self-educated, to behave itself. Until you have discovered a process of transforming the train-robbers, burglars, highwaymen and other besotted and criminal human beings into decent and respectable members of society, it might be just as well for you to get along as slowly as possible in the populating enterprise.

Have one or two babies in the family, by all means, but when you get your supply, bring 'em up up right, compel them to mind; demand of them that they shall respect you and all others older than themselves; make them understand that the world exacts a task from every human creature and that they must not shirk what is coming to them.

That is the way things are being run now in the Eagle country, and you must admit that as the Eagles decrease in numbers they improve in quality. In speaking thus you of course understand that there is nothing personal about this on the part of

THE EAGLE.

One Question Causes Strike.

A walking delegate of the Capmakers' Union called a strike in the factory of Rosenstreich Bros., at 27 West Third street, on Thursday, because one of the employés, a member of the union, had asked him his reasons for fining a fellow employé. The strike was settled yesterday by the firm's agreeing to discharge both men and not to take either of them back in the future. Only in this way, it was said, could the walking delegate forget the "insult."

Rosenstreich Bros. employ about twenty-five hands, and on Wednesday the walking delegate, whose name is Typograph, saw one of the cutters using a long knife. Long knives are used in Europe, but the union has a rule that short knives must be used here.

The cutter, whose name was Levine, explained that he was just using the knife for a moment on a piece of work. The next day the man was ordered before the Executive Board of the union, discharged from the union, and told that it would cost him $25 to get back.

The same day the same walking delegate paid another visit to the shop, and Morris Benjamin, a cutter, asked him why the other man had been punished so severely.

"You shut your mouth," said the walking delegate in reply.

Benjamin said that as a member of the union he had a right to know. The walking delegate replied by ordering all the men out on strike and leaving the building himself. Benjamin was ordered before the Executive Board, fined $10 at the request of the same walking delegate, and told he must quit work in that particular shop.

Then the union served notice on the firm that none of the operatives could come back to work until the man had quit. The firm did not want a long strike on their hands, so they agreed yesterday morning. One of the firm asked Walking Delegate Typograph why the man had to leave their employ, if his fine was paid.

"Because I don't want to see his face any more," was the answer.—[New York Sun.

Aluminum Ousting Copper.

Aluminum lines are now employed for the three longest electrical transmissions in North America. In the longest single line, that from Electra power-house to San Francisco, a distance of 154 miles, aluminum is the only conductor used. The 144-mile transmission between Colgate and Oakland is carried out with three aluminum and three copper wires. For the third transmission in point of length that from Shawinigan Falls to Montreal, a distance of eighty-five miles, three aluminum conductors are employed.

From these examples it may be seen that copper has lost its former place as the only conductor to be seriously considered for transmission circuits. Aluminum has not only disputed this claim for copper, but has actually gained the most conspicuous place in long transmission lines. This victory of aluminum has been won in hard competition. The decisive factor has been that of cost for a circuit of given length and resistance.

From the standpoint of cross-sectional area aluminum is inferior to copper as an electrical conductor. Comparing wires of equal sizes and lengths the aluminum have only 60 per cent. of the conductivity of the copper. The inferiority of aluminum as an electrical conductor in terms of sectional area is more than offset by its superiority over copper in terms of weight. One pound of aluminum drawn into a wire of any length will have a sectional area 3.33 times as great as one pound of copper in a wire of equal length. This follows from the fact that the weight of copper is 556 pounds, while that of aluminum is only 167 pounds per cubic foot, so that for equal weights the bulk of the latter is 2.33 times that of the former metal. Hence, for equal resistances, the weight of an aluminum is only one-half as great as that of a copper wire of the same length. From this fact it is evident that when the price per pound of aluminum is any less than twice the like price of copper the former is the cheaper metal for a transmission line of any required length and electrical resistance.—[Engineering Magazine.

A YOUNG METHOD Crown and bridge work is comparatively young in dental methods and only within a short time has it been perfected and become recognized for real value. It is especially difficult work, calling for expert understanding of its principles and long practice to make perfect. The old-fashioned dentist would rather advise extract is than attempt it. I would rather perform such expert work than any I know because I know how perfect its results may be made, and how to make them perfect. Call any day.

SUMMARY OF THE DAY.

Ex-Constable George Brown, an inspector of street sweeping, assaulted ex-Councilman Blanchard of the Ninth Ward in front of the City Hall yesterday morning, but he was drunk and his blows did no harm. No cause is known for Brown's action. Street Superintendent Werdin said that he would discharge Brown.

Mrs. Ludington is accused of fraud in a mining deal in a suit filed yesterday.

The foreman of the Hellman Building was fined $15 was fighting on a plank in mid air, eight stories high.

AT THE CITY HALL.

"FURIOUS" ATTACK OF EX-CONSTABLE.

GEORGE BROWN ASSAULTS FORMER COUNCILMAN BLANCHARD.

Ex-member from the Ninth Loses His Balance and Falls Over a Bike Into the Street—Brown Loses His Job as Inspector of Sweeping.

Afflicted with several kinds of hallucination—and whisky—ex-Constable George Brown, at present an inspector of sweeping in the street department, assaulted former Councilman E. L. Blanchard of the Ninth Ward in front of the City Hall yesterday forenoon at 11:30 o'clock.

Brown tells his friends that he is something of a featherweight scrapper, but it must be recorded that his blows lacked steam. The ex-legislator emerged from the situation unscratched.

What it was all about is a mystery hidden in the bosom of Brown only. Blanchard says that he never met Brown before, to his knowledge. During the last city campaign when Brown was running for Councilman from the Eighth Ward Blanchard, sitting over in the Ninth, heard about it.

Later when Brown's running was not for but away from the job of Councilman, Blanchard also heard about the event. But the retiring Councilman from the Ninth was then enjoying the twilight of his career as a statesman and paid little attention.

Now many months after Brown's running and the fall of Blanchard's twilight the ex-constable bursts into notoriety.

It happened thusly: Brown was descending the steps of the City Hall in company with Councilman Todd of the Eighth Ward. It may be mentioned that Todd secured Brown's appointment as an inspector; also that Todd defeated Brown in the race for the Council during the last campaign.

Councilman Blanchard was walking meditatively south on Broadway, and as he saw Todd coming toward him down the steps he paused.

Then Brown—still full of whisky—made a spectacular leap from the steps to the sidewalk, and all but caught Blanchard a vicious swing on the jaw. The ex-constable, taking renewed courage from the strength that seemed to be in his arm, planted a terrific uppercut with his left just in front of the ex-Councilman's nose. It would surely have drawn the claret had it been as good as its intent.

Blanchard now being fully at the mercy of his assailant, the feather-weight ex-constable proceeded with swings, punches and short-arm jabs to almost hit the ex-Councilman at every blow.

By this time several lovers of the peace and also of a good fight who couldn't endure the fiasco, stepped in between the men. Brown, however, followed up his advantage by cross counters in the atmosphere adjoining Blanchard's jaw and this put the ex-Councilman down and out into the the street.

In avoiding this blow the ex-City Papa showed great generalship, for, if he'd stood still, Brown would have "basted" him.

Blanchard stumbled over a bike leaning forninst the curb, and Brown tried to kick him, but played in the same hard luck he had with his blows.

While Brown was doing some very pretty leg work for an advantage he swore most atrociously at the ex-Councilman, and said: "You're the Councilman from the Ninth Ward, —— —— you, you ——— ——; you will do me dirt, will you? ——— you, you ——— ——; and other blanks.

Ex-Councilman Blanchard says that Brown's assault is as much a mystery to him as it must be to Brown. He says he thinks that Brown must have thought he (Blanchard) was Councilman Nofziger of the Ninth Ward. Councilman Nofziger says that he scarcely knows Brown and can think of no reason why Brown should have wanted to annihilate him.

When Councilman Todd proposed the name of Brown as an inspector of sweeping, Nofziger voted for him. Street Superintendent Werdin said last night that Brown would be dropped from the force.

AT THE COURT HOUSE

WOMAN VS. WOMAN IN MINE DEAL.

"SHE" CLAIMS "SHE" SOLD HER STOCK IN FAKE CONCERN.

Mrs. Ludington Paid Her Money and Then Found That No Such Mining Company Existed—Wants Her Three Hundred Back of Course.

Mrs. M. L. Ludington was accused, in a suit filed yesterday of selling a trusting woman stock in a mining company that did not exist.

Suit was begun against her by Mrs. E. E. Bennett.

Mrs. Bennett says that Mrs. Ludington offered to sell her 5000 shares of stock in the Ludington Mining and Milling Company for $500, saying that the stock might be paid for at the rate of $300 down and the balance later.

Mrs. Bennett claims that Mrs. Ludington represented to her that the Ludington Mining Company, owned valuable mining property in Sinaloa.

After paying the preliminary $300, Mrs. Bennett claims that she learned that no such corporation as the Ludington Mining and Milling Company was in existence.

She wants the $300 back.

The answer of defendant has not been filed.

CLOTHES THIEF.

SENT TO PRISON.

Pedro Santa Ana, believed to be one of the various tribe of clothing thieves who hang around the City of Mexico, pleaded guilty to stealing a pair of shoes from a lodging-house. Judge Smith sentenced him to Folsom for one year.

CORDELL CRAZY.

EXCUSE FOR SHOOTING.

George Cordell, the man who shot into a house at Long Beach, is believed to be insane.

He was arraigned before Judge Smith yesterday on a charge of assault to commit murder. His attorney, George P. Adams, Esq., stated to the court that he believed the man to be irresponsible. When he comes up for trial, the question of his sanity will be determined before a jury.

THE INFERIOR COURTS.

FOUGHT ON A PLANK TOTTERING IN MID-AIR.

SCRAP EIGHT STORIES HIGH AT HELLMAN BUILDING.

Padget Saw Nothing Specially Peculiar in Having a Fight Under Those Conditions—Drunk Said Train Must Have Hit Him.

A desperate fist fight on a narrow 24-inch plank swaying eight stories above the ground occurred at the Hellman building.

The fighters were up in the Police Court yesterday, one being on trial for battery.

A. L. Padget, the defendant, is a sub-foreman on the building. He suspected one of his employés—L. Seger—of stirring up his men to labor union troubles. He came across him on the plank stretched through mid-air from one girder to another, eight stories above ground, and taxed him with disloyalty.

The workman seemed about to strike him, and Padget punched him in the head.

It did not seem to have occurred to Padget that this was not a good prize ring.

"Wasn't that a pretty dangerous place to fight in?" asked the court.

Padget thought it over, and didn't know but what it was. He was fined $15.

FIFTY DRINKS A DAY.

IS HURLBUT'S LIMIT.

F. Hurlbut, who works on a compressed-air house cleaner, has a black eye that he can't account for. The policeman on his beat says Hurlbut got drunk and a restaurant man hit him in the eye with a three-legged stool.

"It couldn't have been that, Your Honor," he said to Judge Chambers yesterday. "I only had four glasses of whisky, and that couldn't have made me drunk. Why, I always drink thirty or forty whiskies in the course of a day."

"How do you account for that eye then?" asked the court.

Hurlbut considered the matter; felt tenderly of the eye, and said: "Your Honor, I think one of them S. P. engines must have hit me."

His trial was set for Thursday.

EX-POLICEMAN DRUNK.

FINED IN COURT.

George Amer, who has handcuffed the melancholy drunk many a time and oft while on the police force, was in the prisoner's dock as a drunk himself yesterday.

A policeman found him sitting in a buggy on Central avenue dead drunk. When an attempt was made to arrest him, Amer fought like a catamount. He was fined $5.

"EXPRESS IS BEHIND ME,"

THREATENED A DRUNK.

F. M. McDonald, who says he is a newspaper man with the Evening Express behind him, was arrested twice early yesterday morning, howling drunk.

The first time he was arrested was when he was just far enough along to feel that his great accomplishment was singing. When a policeman tried to make him stop, McDonald told him haughtily that he had the Evening Express behind him and was going to have the police "roasted" in the Record because of this outrage.

When he got to the Police Station he was allowed to go on bail. Later he was picked up drunk and sent in again.

McDonald tried to be "smart" when he was arraigned before Justice Chambers and was fined $15.

TEN-CENT MEAL.

COST HIM $5.

James O'Toole, who feared tamale men might be getting into the capitalist class, preferred to go to jail yesterday rather than pay 10 cents he was shy on the price of a meal. When an officer was summoned he stood as firm as a martyr. Justice Chambers fined him $5, which was a pretty good price to pay for a 10-cent meal.

Chain Gang Escape.

Frank Thomas, a coon who escaped from the chain gang, where he was serving fifty days for disturbing the peace, was fined $10 in Justice Chambers's court yesterday. Thomas only had nine days to serve when he escaped.

McMahon Held.

Dan McMahon was held over for trial yesterday for trying to stab Detective Talamantes.

The charge of grand larceny standing against McMahon was dismissed.

He was accused of stealing a horse and rig from Verdugo Park. There were a number of others with the rig, however, when the arrest was made, so there was nothing to fix the responsibility exclusively on McMahon.

THAT ROOMING-HOUSE DEAL.

Roberts Land Company Says Their Accuser is Being Made the Victim of a Lawyer.

With reference to the statement in the complaint filed by Mrs. Laura Hamer against the Roberts Land Company and E. H. Turner, that she had been deceived by them in the purchase of a rooming-house, Mr. Roberts said yesterday:

"The house is fully worth the price, and we have stood ready at any time to cancel the contract and refund the money, after deducting expenses, but we have never been requested to do so. We never made a representation that there was a two years' lease on the property, nor made any other false representations of any character. Mrs. Hamer is simply being made the victim of a lawyer who wants to make an attorney's fee. We wish to protect both parties, and are anxious to see the money refunded after expenses are deducted."

ORGANIZED FRAUD, IT SAYS.

Editorial on the Printers' Strike at Spokane.

New York Evening Post Reviews the Whole Case.

Says "A More Brazen Repudiation of Contracts Was Never Witnessed."

[From the Spokane Spokesman-Review.]

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Under the headline, "Organized Fraud," the New York Evening Post today discusses the printers' strike at Spokane. It says:

"We made a brief reference the other day to a shocking breach of faith on the part of the Typographical Union of Spokane Falls, Wash., toward the Spokesman-Review newspaper of that place. As the case involves the permanent relations between the International Typographical Union and the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, it calls for some further notice.

"Those relations were defined by a written agreement, which went into effect May 1, 1902, to continue in force five years. It provided that any publisher who was a member of said association and who employed, under verbal or written contract, union labor affiliated with said international union, should be protected by the latter 'against walkouts, strikes, boycotts, or any other form of concerted interference with the peaceful operation of the labor so contracted for,' provided such publisher should enter into an agreement with said international union to arbitrate all differences that might arise between the publisher and the local union, in case such differences could not be settled by direct adjustment.

THE ARBITRATION CONTRACT.

"W. H. Cowles, the publisher of the Spokesman-Review, a member of the Publishers' Association, acting under the terms of this agreement, entered into a contract with James M. Lynch, president of the International Typographical Union, October 2, 1902, providing that all disputes with the local union should be submitted to arbitration, each party to select one arbitrator, and the two thus chosen to select a third, the decision of a majority of such board to be binding upon both parties. Pending final decision, work should be continued as usual. In case either party should be dissatisfied with the decision of the local board it might ask for a review of the case by a national board of arbitration, consisting of the president of the International Typographical Union (James M. Lynch) and the commissioner of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association (Frederick Driscoll,) these two to select a third, in case of their disagreement. Pending decision under such review, work should be continued as usual. Embodied in this contract was the following clause:

"'In consideration of the agreement by the said proprietor to arbitrate all differences, as provided for herein, with the aforesaid union, the International Typographical Union agrees to underwrite the said contract and guarantees its fulfillment on the part of the aforesaid (local) union, No. 193.'

LOCAL ARBITRATION.

"A few months after this contract was signed the local union of Spokane Falls notified Mr. Cowles that an advance of wages had been ordered and would take effect on a date named. Mr. Cowles declined to pay the rate demanded, saying that he was already paying higher rates than were prevailing in cities of the size of Spokane Falls. He proposed, however, to submit the dispute to arbitration under the terms of the agreement, he to present his claim for a reduction and the union to present its claim for an advance of wages. There was some difficulty in finding the third man for the board of arbitration, but finally both parties accepted the Rev. W. M. Jones, a clergyman of the Unitarian Church in Spokane. Much testimony was given, and eventually a decision was reached, sustaining the contention of Mr. Cowles that he was paying more than the customary rate for cities of the class of Spokane, and that he was entitled to a reduction.

THE UNION'S APPEAL.

"Thereupon, the union took an appeal to the national board of arbitration, consisting of Lynch and Driscoll. They accordingly went to Spokane, heard evidence and arguments, and failed to agree. Mr. Driscoll then proposed that a third member be selected, as required by section 9 of the agreement between the two organizations. Mr. Lynch refused to do so, or take any other steps in the case, alleging that the decision of the local arbitration had been obtained by fraud. This could only mean that the arbitrator, Rev. Mr. Jones, had given his decision from corrupt motives. Of this not a scintilla of evidence was offered—nothing but Mr. Lynch's private opinion. Mr. Driscoll then proposed to submit to arbitration the question whether the decision of the local board was fairly and honestly obtained. This offer was refused by Lynch. Then Driscoll offered to take the case up de novo and have it arbitrated as though the local board had failed to reach any decision. This also was refused by Lynch.

IN HONOR BOUND.

"Under the terms of the agreement, the local union was bound to continue work at the old rates until a decision was reached. Thus, although Lynch's refusal to go on with the arbitration prevented Mr. Cowles from getting the benefit of the decision which called for a reduction of wages, the newspaper was kept going. But as soon as Lynch left town the printers struck for the advance of wages which they had demanded before the arbitration. The Spokesman-Review suspended publication for two days, and then yielded to the demand under protest, intending to hold the opposing parties responsible in damages for violation of the agreement.

"BRAZEN REPUDIATION OF CONTRACT."

"A more brazen repudiation of contract was never witnessed. It remains to be seen whether the International Typographical Union is going to spit upon its guarantee quoted above. Under its terms the international body is bound to furnish Mr. Cowles with a sufficient number of men to take the places of the faithless ones who struck in defiance of superior authority. It is bound also to censure, if not depose, President Lynch, who has given his sanction to such a glaring breach of faith. It has listened to speeches by Lynch and Driscoll and has referred the whole question to the committee on arbitration, whose action will be awaited with great interest.

"It remains to be seen, also, whether the Newspaper Publishers' Association is going to pocket this affront. To do so would be little less than signing its own death warrant. The association was formed for mutual protection and expressly to meet emergencies of this kind. Its whole plan was to meet combintion with combination, and here is its chance to see whether it has the strength to sustain its legal and moral rights, or whether the confederation it stands for is a rope of sand. If it consents to the repudiation of its contract with the Typographical Union in a single case, if it allows one of its members to be trodden under foot, then all will be trampled down in turn, and will deserve the fate awaiting them."

Harry Lehr's Wrist Bag.

The little gilt chain bags or purses carried by women will soon be a necessity for men if the novelty introduced by Harry Lehr at the Casino this morning is adopted.

Mr. Lehr is responsible for many innovations in the social world. He figured in the monkey parties; he walked down Bellevue avenue with Mrs. Fish, each of them holding the hand of a rag doll; he designed dresses for his women friends; he was ringmaster at Mrs. Oelrichs's circus, and recently there ws a story printed, the truth of which he denied vigorously, that he slept with a rose in his hair.

The question now is, will the men carry wrist bags, as illustrated by Mr. Lehr? The ladies all looked astonished at Mr. Lehr when he strolled to the tennis tournament with Mrs. Lehr and Mrs. Fish this morning with a dainty square purse, made of gold links, attached to a slender gold chain dangling from his wrist. The chain was coiled around his wrist twice, "just as the ladies do it, you know," he explained to his acquaintances who asked him questions.

Some thought that he was playing the proper married man's part, and was merely toting the bag around to save Mrs. Lehr the trouble of carrying it.

Mr. Lehr, in his high-pitched tenor voice, explained to the ladies that if they supposed he was carrying the bag for anyone except himself they were very much mistaken. The little chain purse is his, and he intends to use it, as he finds it very useful to hold small change, a pencil and other odds and ends. The ladies smiled at him this morning, the young boys and the debutantes giggled and enjoyed what they thought was a great joke, and Mr. Lehr continued on his way serenely satisfied with himself.—[New York Sun.

When One's Nerve Fails.

It is a curious thing, and one that remains a standing puzzle, even to those connected with the business all their lives, that tight-rope, trapeze and other daring performers who chiefly work in the open air at galas and so on, are far more liable to sudden nerve failure and to "stage fright," if it may be so called, than are their fellows who only sho wtheir prowess under a roof.

Another fact equally well known is that once a woman performer has heard the ringing shouts of an applauding public, once she has learned some dangerous feat, she will run risks and quite fearlessly perform tricks that no male in the same line would ever dream of. The woman athlete has not to be urged on; she has to be restrained, more often than not. It may be said at once that few among the public know how near death such people occasionally are.

As illustrating both the facts stated above, the writer can never forget seeing a woman tight-rope walker whose rope had been left too slack. She was performing at a great height, and when she got to a certain distance along the rope the latter sagged so that she could neither advance nor retire. The public knew nothing of the danger until the manager in an agony tried to get two immense ladders, tied together, up to the rope. But this arrangement fell short, and even if it had not done so no one would have dared to rest it against the swaying rope. At last the ladders were held bodily upright by strong men till the topmost rung just touched the rope; then a gallant young fellow, a sailor, went up, while the ladder swayed about as though in a breeze. He snatched the woman on the rope and held her, just as she fainted and dropped the balancing pole.—[Tit-Bits.

The Instructive Butler.

All the guests, with one exception, at a recent gathering of a portion of Washington's swelldom were quietly amused because of an embarrassing occurrence in connection with which the exception mentioned figured as the victim. The exception was a lady well known for her many charities, but who has not yet learned the ways of the world. She was dining with a party of friends, and when the butler, in voice dignified but equally as loud, "but we are using forks, not spoons, for ices this season."

The other guests made believe they hadn't heard, but they had, and some of them repeated the remarks.—[Washington Star.

Kingman Is the King of All Mining Camps

While Kingman is an old mining camp where a great deal of money has been expended and where a large amount of gold has been taken out, yet recent discoveries there of an immense gold bearing reef makes it certain to become one of the richest mining camps in the world. It is not a placer country, but the gold is all found in rock formations, making it necessary to install machinery to get the ore out and work it.

The camp has attracted the attention of some of the biggest mine operators of the country, and a large sum of money is being expended in the Kingman district installing substantial and expensive plants for operating the many rich mines recently uncovered.

Company's Mines in Heart of Great Kingman Strike

The Blue Ridge Company's Mine is in Mojave County, Arizona, 25 miles west of Kingman and six miles east of the Colorado river. It is known as the Salamander group and is located in the heart of the big Kingman strike, being surrounded by many rich claims. Six miles northwest are the Odea and Dempsey mines. Two miles west is the "New Comstock," operating a 20-stamp mill. Ten miles southeast is the "Gold Roads" mines, one of the largest gold producing mines in Arizona. "The Leland," 8 miles south, just sold for a quarter of a million. The Tyro property just bought by Sen. Dorsey is in immediate vicinity of Blue Ridge Mines. The richness of the Blue Ridge property is demonstrated by mill tests of large quantities of ore taken at random from the pay streak as far as exposed. These tests all showed $30 to $50 per ton free gold, and concentrates running as high as $520 per ton. Mill tests, as all miners know, give correct estimates of an ore body's richness as that assays full entirely to accomplish.

Ex-Senator Dorsey Buys Tyro Property, Kingman

From L. A. Express.

Former United States Senator Stephen W. Dorsey of Arkansas, who is living in Los Angeles and conducting extensive mining operations from here, has acquired the Tyro mining property, west of Kingman, in the Gold Roads range. The purchase price named is $100,000. Daniel McFarland of Los Angeles negotiated the sale. The transfer is one of the most important of the year. It is said the ore shoot encroops for more than half a mile, and it is declared to be sixty feet wide on the surface. Ore values are said to average $30, with a pay streak of considerable magnitude in addition.

Development on a large scale has been begun by the new owners, and a tunnel will crosscut the vein about 200 feet below the surface. The property is situated near the Colorado river, and in the range that produced the Gold Roads, the Gold Roads Extension, the German-American and the Dempsey-Odea properties. The last named was recently sold to a Chicago syndicate for $250,000.

Frank Griffith is associated with Senator Dorsey in this purchase. The senator also has acquired five claims in the Granite Reef near Kingman, and will work the prospects in order to determine whether or not the alleged bonanza is of value.

ALFRED BENJAMIN'S

Fall Styles Are Ready

The correct clothes for correct dressers. Swellest styles in Overcoats and Suits. The most exclusive and highest grade Clothing in America.

Remarkable Progress of Los Angeles

AN INSTITUTION OF WHICH THE CITY MAY BE JUSTLY PROUD.

That the Western edge of the continent is keeping pace with the Atlantic Coast is proven once more by the magnificent new clothing room just completed for James Smith & Co.

This store, whose architecture is in the Ionic style, surpasses any clothing store West of New York city. With its high ceiling, its massive pillars, its grand mirrors, its palatial air, it is, indeed, a monument to the enterprise of Los Angeles.

Although by far the most richly appointed and the largest exclusive clothing house on the Coast, the business has been established only two years. This phenomenal growth from a small store to the leading clothing house of the city is a matter of comment among all clothing men throughout the United States. There never has been an instance in any city where so vast a business has been built up in so short a period.

The credit for the undertaking belongs to Mr. James Smith, who recognized the superiority of Alfred Benjamin & Co.'s clothing, and foresaw that the immense success which this clothing had made in the East could be repeated in Los Angeles.

Mr. Smith secured the exclusive right to handle this foremost make of clothing, and his wide circle of friends assured him of a large business from the very start. Men soon perceived the excellence of the Alfred Benjamin garments, and the business grew by leaps and bounds.

Mr. Smith has insisted on the utmost liberal policy in his business.

The magnificent, enlarged store seems peculiarly appropriate for this most exclusive and highest grade of men's clothing. There is no store even in New York city which affords a finer collection of the correct fashions for men. James Smith & Co. certainly deserve the warm support which they have received from well dressed men.

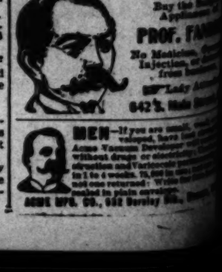
Louisville Man Originates Simple Little Device That Instantly Restores the Hearing—Fits Perfectly, Comfortably, and Does Not Show.



Since the discovery of a Louisville man no longer necessary for any deaf person to carry a trumpet, a tube, or any such old-fashioned device, for it is now possible for one to hear perfectly by a simple device that fits in the ear and cannot be seen. The honor belongs to Mr. George H. Wilson of Louisville, who was himself deaf for years as well as anyone. He calls it Wilson's Common Sense Ear Drum, and it is made of some scientific principles, composed of any kind, and is entirely different in every respect. It is so small that no one can see it, but nevertheless, it collects all sound waves and diverts them against the drum of the head, causing you to hear perfectly and distinctly as when the natural ear drum is perfect. It is entirely invisible, and is worn entirely in the ear, and cannot be detected by the closest observer. It is entirely different from all other devices, and is the only one that will help the deaf. It is entirely different from all other devices, and is the only one that will help the deaf. Business Lets up a Little, Which Eases Money Market.

Trend in Labor Circles Also a Factor in Trade.

Conditions in Wall Street do Not Seem the West—Time to Breathe Has Arrived.

BY E. S. LITTLE.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31.—Solicitous men is to be detected in Washington as to the immediate future of business industry in the United States. New York is today and for the last five years has been the financial center of the world—the place where financial activity is greatest, where financial activity is liveliest and where the greatest transactions have been carried on. For the United States of America and the business nations of the world in the last five or six years New York has created more capital and seems has borrowed more money than other financial centers at home and abroad and has loaned more money than any other financial center on earth. The activity at that center has been nearly amazing. Whether the feeling in it at hand, and where it is going to be, is the question that is puzzling the experts of the Treasury Department whose duty it is to keep an eye on general business and to see whether a little help by the Department will or will not stem the onward tide of finance and commerce.

Some months ago, upon the failure of the Aldrich bill, your correspondent quoted the words of Senator Aldrich in which, in an open speech in the Senate, he expressed the fear that the business of the country would experience a severe setback this summer and fall. Senator Aldrich thought then, and apparently thinks now, that the lack of a circulating medium would do and is doing the damage. That he is probably correct that is shown by the extraordinary rates for money in New York for time and call loans; and in such case and abundance of money in all of the banks of the Middle States and the Pacific Coast. There is in fact, to be a surplus of ready money for all purposes. The trouble seems to be that business men are afraid to use the money that is at their command—they are waiting to see what the future will bring forth. In other words, there is nothing on earth as cowardly as a million dollars, unless it is a million dollars.

The fearful fall in prices that has taken place in Wall street seems to have aroused the West—the young giant that lies beyond the Alleghenies from itself so amazingly strong that it can sit back and laugh at the misfortune of that old master of finance, Wall street. But to those who stop for a moment and think of the close relationship between Wall street and all the great railroad and industrial corporations of the country, the decline in prices means a very serious thing, and the possibility of a corresponding decline in industries generally seems not remote. This decline has affected the financial status of every railroad property in the country, whose stocks and bonds are listed upon the New York Stock Exchange. Stocks and bonds may at times be worth more or less than they are selling for in New York, but in the end they will get to their proper level, and their actual worth price will be recorded upon the stock tapes that run out in thousands of banking houses recording the figures made upon the stock exchange. It is a barometer of trade—a clearinghouse for certificates that pretty accurately registers real worth in the long run, taking it year in and year out.

Hundreds of millions of dollars of these stocks and bonds are listed upon the stock exchange. When the prices advance, as they did from 1897 to 1902, the borrowing power of the stockholders in railroads and industrial corporations is increased in corresponding measure with the advance. When stock and bond prices are depressed the collateral borrowing power of the people of the country is depressed in corresponding measure with the decline. And as the borrowing power is depressed, in these days of credit, to that extent must the business operations be curtailed. Railroads and industrial corporations borrow money, in large measure, upon their own stocks and bonds, so the relation may be seen clearly.

Several things are contributing to a curtailment of activity. One of them—perhaps the chief of all—is the unrest in labor circles. Building operations are constantly being tied up by strikes. This has been going on for months and months, and the troubles commenced when the Eastern part of the United States was witnessing one of the greatest building booms in its history. When building operations came to a standstill the iron and steel business felt it immediately. New orders for steel are some fifty per cent. below what they were last year. Old orders given a year ago in anticipation of a continuation of the boom, are being cancelled at the rate of six or seven per cent. per month. That tells an important story. New orders for brass and copper and all building material are falling off sharply. The Wall street decline was simply a forerunner of all of this. Had great activity continued, Mr. Aldrich would have been right—there would now be a money famine. But with a season of comparative inactivity, there is plenty of money. Notwithstanding all of this, few persons are to be found who believe that the future looks gloomy. The country generally takes a bit of a rest from business as a Presidential campaign approaches. There is all the more reason for taking a rest at this time because of the great activity of the last few years, the inflation of credits through an excess of new stock issues, and the demands for changes in the tariff system. It is believed by shrewd observers that the next few months will see business all over the country gradually rearing its sails to adjust itself to whatever conditions may arise in business, in politics or finance, and this is greatly desired by many men who would see a panic avoided. They believe that were the boom to be continued much longer, a panic would be the certain result. They believe that a curtailment of activities now will avoid a panic, and place the business interests of this country in position to take a new grip on affairs after the next Presidential campaign and go ahead to still another and more distant outpost.

Varicocele

We can truthfully say that no physician on the Pacific Coast has the pronounced success attending his treatment for VARICOCELE AS WE HAVE. We GUARANTEE AN ABSOLUTE AND PERFECT CURE IN 4 to 6 days. Treatment is simple and painless

Contracted Diseases

By this we mean specific blood poison, urethral inflammation, strictures, local ulcers and swellings. We have warned men against neglect of treatment, of unreliable methods for treating this most serious disorder. All who come to us receive courteous treatment. Consultation and examination free.

Stricture

Our method of treating stricture is painless and permanent, free from cutting, always successful. We do away with the stricture with a simple method of absorption by local application which leaves the tissues in their original normal condition. We make the cure complete.

Weakness

The common practice is to prescribe stimulating drugs in case of vital weakness, without regard to the cause of the trouble. Cases of weakness which we treat are invariably cured by finding and removing the local disturbing cause by scientific local treatment.

Kidneys and Bladder

Every person, old or young, should have a careful, scientific chemical analysis of the urine at least twice a year. Don't neglect this opportunity. No doctor can treat the kidneys or bladder successfully unless he is thoroughly up on urine analysis, which is the only means of a correct diagnosis.

Never Mind The Symptoms

I Remove the "Exact Cause" Responsible for the Trouble Whether it be Local or Constitutional

Functional Weakness

With the greater number of men suffering from a cause not entirely clear to their understanding, and who have treated by stimulating methods without relief, there is a deep underlying cause, which is absolutely necessary to remove before functional activity can be restored. I believe the treatm ent I employ is the most potent and effective in removing the exact cause of functional weakness.

Varicocele

I effect a cure in 4 to 6 days, which is permanent and complete. I may refer you to a number of cases if you are in doubt or have been treated unsuccessfully. In this you will know just what you can depend upon. My personal attention to each case treated is necessary to attain quick results.

Contracted Diseases

Become chronic through improper treatment with painful, caustic remedies, which cause strictures, ulceration and inflammation. I am confident I cure these ailments more quickly and with less pain and inconvenience than anyone claiming to treat these conditions. I get at the EXACT CAUSE and by personal attention effect a speedy and permanent cure.

Stricture

I cure some of the most aggravated cases in 10 to 15 days. By a thorough and combined method of electricity and irrigation I am able to remove all urethral obstruction, all inflammation and soreness, thus rendering the canal healthy and free from any obstruction whatever. My treatment is the most cleanly, thorough and effective known.

To suppress symptoms means temporary relief only—and a reoccurence of the trouble is sure to follow. By my direct method of treatment and with my facilities I am enabled to remove the cause. I am confident the treatment I employ is the most rational and brings more good results than any method known. During 20 years practice I have made it a point not to guess but to know why I treat any condition, then you may know what you can depend on.

Not by Mail

How many times have you guessed at your condition? And how many times have you had others guess at it, and how many times have you met with failure? I'm ready to prove my claim. I can do more in one week, under a better cure, give you more lasting results than you can ever hope to receive by mail. I take no part in such guesswork. When I treat a condition I know just what to do and just how to do it, and the effect will be just what you desire, and all I promise. It's the real cured you desire, not mere suppression of symptoms for a monetary consideration.

Piles

I cure without any operation whatever. They are a condition which may be treated unsuccessfully for years. I cure by direct contact, and by restoring tone to the hemorrhoidal veins. The cure is absolute, and no return will occur. Also Rectal Troubles, Chronic Nervous Disorders, Bladder and Urethral Diseases and Prostatic Troubles.

YOUR CHANCE IS HERE

Make money investing where capitalists are investing millions for profit.

Men who make money on real estate don't go by surface indications. They dig down deep to find if there are reasons for a town to grow, and if so they invest. Capitalists are putting millions in San Pedro enterprises. Why? Because they know that it's a town that must grow. Buying real estate in San Pedro is not a speculation. It's only nailing down a profit, for San Pedro has a future founded on solid things. It's growth is backed by men of wealth who are investing their capital in enterprises there that are hastening the city's growth. If it's a good enough place for rich men to invest, it's a better place for poorer men to do likewise. Capitalists cannot invest money to make San Pedro grow and not increase the value of every square foot of land in and around the Harbor City. If you don't own real estate in San Pedro, NOW IS THE TIME TO BUY. Delay means that if you buy later will have to share your profits with the man who buys now.

Free Transportation. Anyone wishing to go to San Pedro and investigate this property will be furnished free transportation at our office.

Extract from editorial L. A. Express, Sept. 2nd.

Major J. H. Willard, United States engineer in charge of the harbor improvements at San Pedro, in his official report to the war department at Washington, announces the completion of so much of the San Pedro breakwater as tends to serve as a partial protection for shipping in stormy weather. From this it is not to be inferred the breakwater is completed, but it does mean that the heaviest part of the great work has been accomplished and that San Pedro's outer harbor now is safe for the shipping of the world.

This announcement is of great importance to Los Angeles, marking, as it does, a new era in the progress and development not only of this city, but all Southern California. It means that San Pedro has been placed in a position to handle all craft from a dory to the biggest deep water vessel desirous of entering that harbor; that this favorable condition is not unappreciated is shown by the fact that a growth of 22 per cent. in the shipping of the port is noted for the last calendar year and an increase of 91.8 per cent. recorded over the tonnage of the year previous.

GRAND VIEW TRACT

The best investment opportunity for profit in the entire city of San Pedro.

This is the best investment opportunity in the Harbor City, for the reason that the city's growth will make it necessary to build more homes to house the increased population. San Pedro must grow in the direction Grand View Tract is located because it's the direction where millions are to be invested in various enterprises. It's the tract where the best homes will be built, for it places the safeguard to the home of a "no saloon" restriction. It also has a $1500 building restriction, making certain the erection of a good class of homes. It is two blocks from the new Harbor electric line now building. Water will be had in abundance. Cement walks and curbs are being laid. The tract commands as fine a view as any in Southern California. Sixty lots have been sold in sixty days. Over half gone and demand is big. Don't delay, but go down at once and pick out a lot. They are low in price, comparatively, than any other lots in the entire city. It's the place to buy and now is the time. Take a trip at our expense and look at Grand View Tract.

SERIOUS OBSTRUCTION TO WATER STORAGE.

TONTO BASIN WORK BRINGS UP TRANSPORTATION PROBLEMS.

Materials for Great Undertaking Must Go Over Roughest Mountain Country and Cost of Railway Would be Enormous—General Territorial News.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

PHOENIX (Ariz.) Sept. 3.—Arthur Powell Davis, engineer in charge of the Tonto Basin water storage work, has returned to Phoenix, and is now working with the Water Storage Commission and the Board of Trade particularly in regard to the matter of transportation between Phoenix and the damsite. It is only fifty-three miles from Mesa, on both the Southern Pacific and Santa Fé Railroad connections, to the damsite, but about twelve of those miles are through the roughest mountain country in Arizona. It is believed it will cost fully $150,000 to put the road through. It would be better to handle freight to the dam by way of this valley, but it is doubtful if the government will stand the cost of such an expensive road. Railroad freights to Globe, by way of the Gila Valley Railroad, are extremely high, but wagon transportation from Globe to the damsite will be over an excellent road, and with a down-hill pull for only about thirty miles.

Until the water-power works are in operation, a temporary steam plant will be needed for the work. The magnitude of even this temporary plant may be imagined from Mr. Davis's figures that 15,000,000 pounds of crude oil will be required for fuel. To haul this from Mesa will cost about 2 cents a pound. Hundreds of tons of structural material will, as well, have to be delivered at the damsite during the next few months. It seems to be that the people of the Salt River Valley will have to pay about half of the enormous cost of this road or else to be connected with the dam by only the roughest sort of a road, such as will permit the hauling of telephone poles. When the dam is completed the surplus water power available would be more than enough to propel an electric railroad on the line proposed. Nothing has been done thus far in the matter save to discuss the problem in the local Board of Trade rooms.

Frank P. Trott, water commissioner for Maricopa county, has been appointed a member of the Water Storage Commission by District Judge Kent. He fills the place vacated by the death of J. T. Priest. The County Supervisors have appointed Capt. George D. Christy and J. G. Peterson delegates for Maricopa county to the National Irrigation Congress.

BIG SUGAR BEET START.

Seventy-five tons of sugar-beet seed will be planted in the Salt River Valley this winter for the first crop to be worked up by the new sugar-beet factory at Glendale. The seed comes from Germany. Contracts are now being signed up for the growing of the beets by the local farmers. About half the acreage, it is expected, will be planted on the south side of the river, quite remote from the factory. Beets showing a percentage of sugar as high as 10 and lower than 12 per cent. will bring $3.66 2-3 per ton. For beets between 12 and 14 per cent., $4; between 14 and 16, $4.33 1-3; between 16 and 18 per cent., $4.66 2-3, and for every 1 per cent. over 18, 33 1-3 cents. At these rates the average price for beets in the valley, as was indicated by the experiments tried in their cultication, will not be very much less than $5 per ton, and will in many cases go higher. The company will furnish the seed to the growers at cost, and will take pay from the crop after it is harvested.

NEEDS FROM CONGRESS.

Col. J. F. Wilson, Delegate to Congress from Arizona, has been traveling throughout Arizona lately, looking up work for himself at the next session of Congress. He has decided that at least two public buildings are essential in Arizona, a combination post-office and Federal building at Phoenix, to cost $100,000 or more, and a custom-house and postoffice at Nogales. He will also try to secure $50,000 buildings for Prescott and Tucson. In each case he believes he can show by figures that the government would save in rentals far more than fair interest on the sums invested. The situation at Nogales is particularly bad, high rental being paid for quarters for the custom-house that are inadequate and unsafe. The Mexican government across the line has an extremely handsome building in which to house its customs officials. Col. Wilson is also interested in the construction of the proposed San Carlos dam, and will devote a large share of his energies in Washington to securing an appropriation for the construction of this Gila storage enterprise at the earliest date. He will leave for Washington early in October.

TERRITORY BRIEFS.

The board of managers for Arizona of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition is getting busy. At a meeting held yesterday in Phoenix plans were outlined for an extremely handsome display. The mining display will be notably attractive and extensive. It will be in charge of Prof. W. P. Blake, head of the mining department of the Territorial University at Tucson. Agricultural exhibits will be mainly from the Salt and Gila River valleys and will include dates, olive oil and many other products novel to the eastern agriculturists. The sawmill men of northern Arizona have been interested and will provide an exhibit clearly showing the lumber resources of the Territory.

The return of the Arizona pilgrims in California has been somewhat hastened by the starting of the schools early in September. The Normal School at Tempe opened yesterday with about 100 students, and with the expectation of a total enrollment of 225, the maximum ever known in the institution.

The Phoenix postoffice was moved yesterday to a handsome new building especially erected for it and leased to the government by the Central-avenue Improvement Company. The cost of the building will approximate $40,000, and the fixtures $5000. Heretofore facilities for handling the mail have been of the most meagar description, but it is now believed that no second-class office in the West is better equipped. The office is a distinctly hard one to handle, through the fact that the winter population is fully 40 per cent. larger than that known in the summer months.

Col. J. F. Wilson has become the sole proprietor of the Arizona Democrat, which lately has been passing through a troublous experience with the Typographical Union. For the next two weeks it will be issued weekly, after which it will be issued daily.

Perhaps the largest dry goods store of Phoenix is owned and managed by a lad of only 21 years, by name Charles Korrick. His age developed yesterday in the Probate Court, when the guardianship over him was released. Only four years ago he was not even acquainted with the language of the country.

Burt Alvord, Arizona's sensational outlaw, is now an inmate of the jail of Phoenix, brought here from Tombstone for safe-keeping. He has resolutely refused to be interviewed since his arrival here, telling that he was tired of being on exhibition and tired as well of newspaper notoriety. The charge against him is that of robbing the United States mail. He is unable to furnish bond in the sum of $9000.

F. B. Custer, for years disciplinarian at the Phoenix Indian Industrial School, has been promoted to be superintendent of the Indian school at Greenville, Cal., and has departed to enter upon his new duties.

H. A. Hansen, owner of about 1200 acres south of Tempe, is preparing to colonize his holdings and to furnish the colonists with water by pumping it. Already he has a pumping plant delivering 514 miners inches of water, which is fully enough for all of his land. He is arranging to bring from sixty to eighty families from Utah and to plant the land the first few years to sugar beets.

Seven hundred dollars per carload was realized this season for cantaloupes shipped from the Salt River Valley to

HAVE been treated by Dr. Schiffman for years. I have tried all his different methods and can say unhesitatingly no dentist or physician has ever operated with such success or skill. In extracting my teeth he did it without any pain. It is a great pleasure to me to recommend him and his method of treatment. MILO M. POTTER, Prop. Van Nuys Hotel and Hotel Potter, Santa Barbara.

Ten years ago a reputable D. D. S. of Va. told me that a certain molar tooth could not be satisfactorily saved and that it would probably not be of service for one year. It has not only served me for ten years, as Dr. Schiffman saved and crowned it, and comparatively painlessly without pain. I sing his praise. L. M. ANDREWS, Pastor M. E. Church, South, Cor. 6th and Mateo Streets.

On account of some unfortunate experience I had in the extraction of my teeth I became a great coward in this respect. Today Dr. Schiffman extracted one of my very refractory teeth without causing me one particle of pain. D. K. TRASK, Judge Superior Court, Los Angeles.

Dr. Schiffman extracted a tooth for me absolutely without pain. His advertising phrase, "Didn't Hurt a Bit," is literally true. R. D. HOLABIRD, Pacific Electrical Works, Under Nadeau, First St.

EVERAL years ago Dr. Schiffman did some crown and bridge work for me which has proved entirely satisfactory. The work was done painlessly and with great skill. It gives me great pleasure to recommend him. IRVING R. SMITH, L. A. Times.

Dr. Schiffman has put in almost an entire upper bridge for me. The bridge is perfect in every respect, and I can use it as well as my natural teeth. The work was promptly and neatly done. J. F. WILLIS, 608 West Twelfth.

Dr. Schiffman pulled two of my wisdom teeth, and it didn't hurt a bit; on the contrary, the sensation was pleasant. GUY L. HARRISON, Vice-Pres. Herald Pub. Co.

It is with pleasure that I state that I have had several teeth filled by Dr. Schiffman. One had to be filled and extracted the nerve and filled the root of one of my teeth and put on a gold crown, which cannot be distinguished from a natural tooth, all of which is without pain. JUDSON R. RUSH, Of Davis & Rush, Attorneys, 5 Rogers Blk.

Have had seven crown work and some filling done, also had ten teeth and roots filled by Dr. Schiffman, and take great pleasure in recommending his method to anyone needing dental work done without pain. MRS. C. T. W. SCHRAMM, Mother of Paloma Schramm, Cor. Austin and Wadsworth.

Dr. Schiffman has put in a very satisfactory piece of bridge work for me and I cheerfully recommend him to anyone in need of dentistry. F. FLORENTINE, 1303 North Main St., County and City Criminal Photographer.

Quite a year ago I had a no 14 gold bridge put in by Dr. Schiffman. The work was very painless, and has proved entirely satisfactory, and I cannot say too much in his favor as a dentist. GUS BASLER, 210 W. First St.

Dr. Schiffman extracted my teeth and replaced same by bridge work. He also treated one of my teeth, which I thought were too far gone to save. The above work was all painless and is perfectly satisfactory. R. A. FOLLARD, 757 Central Ave.

I hereby certify that Dr. Schiffman did some crown work for me seven years ago and it is as good today as it was when he finished the job. E. J. McKENZIE, Police Officer, 1402 Essex St.

Have had fourteen teeth extracted positively without pain by Dr. Schiffman. L. B. OSBORN, Ocean Park Postmaster.

BOXING.

MUNROE TAKES JEFF'S TERMS.

Will Fight in Los Angeles on October 16.

Needs More Time to Train, but Will Do His Best.

Miner Coming West at Once. Both Pugilists to Train Here. Champion Is Glad.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 5.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Jack Munroe has accepted Jim Jeffries's proposition and the two big pugilists will fight for the heavyweight championship of the world in Los Angeles within six weeks.

This was settled here today, when Munroe, finding that Jeffries was determined to fight at once or not at all, decided to accept the champion's challenge, without further quibbling and fight, no matter what disadvantage he may find himself laboring under in the matter of a short training period. The battle will be held in Los Angeles, October 16, under the auspices of the Century Club.

This is in the regulation, old-fashioned John L. Sullivan style, and it is an innovation in these days of long-drawn-out challenges and counter-challenges. Munroe, as soon as his transportation and training expenses are forwarded to him by wire, will leave for the Pacific Coast. He will go direct to Los Angeles, where he will start training for the bout at the earliest possible moment. Tommy West will be Munroe's trainer and chief sparring partner.

The big miner, while he is not satisfied with the amount of time arbitrarily allowed by the champion, stated that he will do the best he can to win the fight.

NEW YORK, Sept. 5.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Regarding his acceptance of Jeffries's terms for a championship fight in Los Angeles, October 16, Jack Munroe said to the correspondent of the Los Angeles Times tonight:

"I am wiring Jeffries an acceptance of his challenge to fight him for the championship in Los Angeles on October 16. The terms proposed to me by Jeffries are greatly to my disadvantage, since he refuses me time enough to train and get into condition for the championship fight. But I am not afraid of Jeffries and I am wiring my acceptance. I would take a train to Los Angeles today, get there in four and a half days, and fight him on the evening of my arrival if that were necessary.

"Of course, I would prefer to meet him on a later date than October 16, but he has replied to my wire asking for a later date, as follows: 'Your proposition is ridiculous; 16th or never; accept or call fight off.'

"He insists upon taking advantage of his recent training and his condition by setting a date that will not allow me the training time a man should have for a big fight.

"All right, I accept. I will go out there and give him the best fight I am able to put up. If he thinks that I am to be bluffed out of fighting him by his insisting on an early date he is making a mistake. I fought him in Butte when I had not had a glove on my hand for years, and when I had just come from my work in the mine. I can do better than that now, even with the short time that is given me for preparation.

"I will show Jeffries that I am not afraid to meet him in a month or in a week, or tomorrow night. His reputation has no more terrors for me than it had when I was a miner working in Butte. I was ready to fight him then, and I will show him and the public that I am ready now."

MUNROE OUTGENERALED THE "CHAMP'S" CAMP.

ANGELENO ENTITLED TO A CRACK AT THE BUTTE MINER.

Some Facts About Their Previous Meeting—In Regard to Importing Referees for Local Contests—Martin's Ideas on Slugger McVey.

Jeffries's agreement to hand Munroe a drubbing was the only item of consequence in local boxing circles last week, with the exception of the debate de fistique between Nell and DeCoursey Friday night. The big fellow has now agreed to box Munroe, and the Butte miner has accepted.

As a matter of fact, Munroe is entitled to a fight with Jeffries upon only one count, and that is his mendacity. Delaney and Jeff are agreed that the miner is such an unqualified prevaricator that he must be roundly thrashed in order to silence him. As for the fluke decision of which Munroe boasts, nothing further need be said than that eyewitnesses to the bout declare the big fellow suffered only through the absence of Delaney, his brainy adviser, and was outgeneraled by a bunch of sporting grafters, whose sole object was, not the giving to the public of a simon-pure, honest contest, but the pulling off of a hippodrome so framed that Munroe obtained a scratch decision through the champion's failure to knock him out in four rounds. As every fight follower knows, it is an exceedingly difficult thing to whip a man who is out to "stay" and do that alone. Local sports will recall the Griffin-Jeffries affair, in which Griff "stayed" by breaking all known world's records of ring sprinting, and going down without punches. Had that affair been arranged without special provision that the decision should be given on the merits of the contest and not on Jeffries's success or failure to carry out his agreement of knocking out the negro, Griffin would have had the decision. This is the kind of "honor" that Munroe holds over Jeffries, according to men who saw the mill.

Jeffries is honestly entitled to a crack at Munroe before the American public, because every man has the right to put himself right when he has made a mistake. Jeff erred in not stipulating that no decision was to be awarded in the Munroe affair, or that one was to be given on the merits of the contest.

As for Munroe's knocking Jeffries down, the big fellow and men who were there denounce that as a press agent's story, Fostered by Clark Ball and his associates.

This much is sure. It has been impossible to drag Munroe into the ring with anybody since Jeffries. The miner deserves credit for one thing. He has outgeneraled the Jeffries camp from start to finish and was in the enviable position of a comparatively untried man, dictating to a champion regarding the terms upon which he would condescend to meet him, and securing valuable advertising gratis.

Tom McCarey's proposition to import Eddie Graney to referee some of the local fights has raised a roar from Harry Stuart, the time-honored official, who has handled so many of the contests. This was to be expected.

While most of Mr. Stuart's argument is naturally of a more or less first person singular character, there is some of it that is sound common sense. Stuart says that if he were incapable, there are plenty of other men here just as good as there are in San Francisco. He is right.

Charles Eyton, Tom Darmody, John Brink—any one of the three—is competent enough to handle any fight anywhere. Each is a man of established reputation here. Each knows the game. The integrity of any one of the three is absolutely above question, for no one of them were they not the upright, fearless sportsmen they are, could afford to do a wrong act. It is a fortunate sporting town that has men of this class identified with the game of boxing.

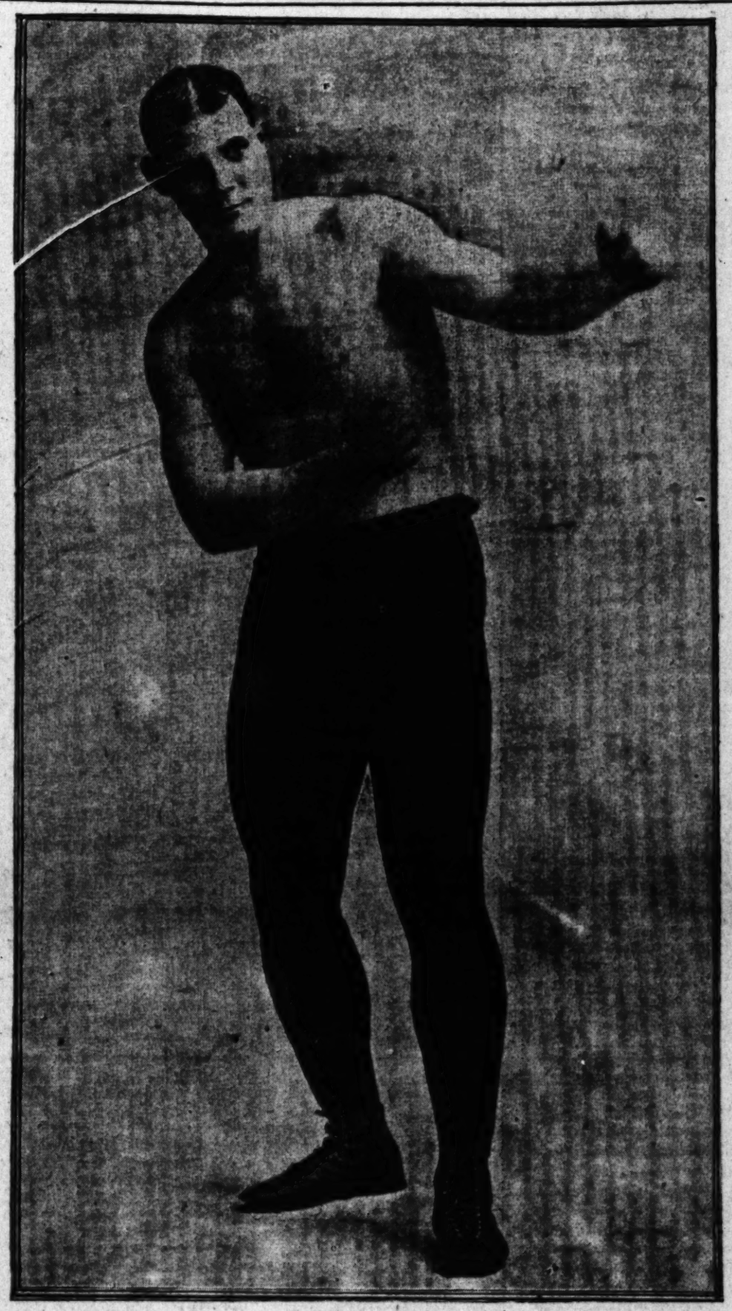
Not long ago a proposal was made to import Charlie White into San Francisco to handle some bouts there. The spectacular grandeur of the roar that arose is still fresh in the minds of boxing lovers.

We can do without Graney or any other San Francisco judge of boxing bouts. They are competent enough, but Los Angeles does not need them.

Big "Denver Ed" Martin's determination to dig into Sam McVey on their coming meeting has aroused some speculation among the ring sportsmen as to the advisability of such tactics. Billy Madden is the prompter of them, and he says that is the way to beat an opponent if your man is strong and clever.

"If a man can fight, send him in and make him do it," says Madden. "This keeping away and diddling never wins any battles. Martin can fight and he will fight. I will make him win or be knocked out in less than five rounds."

Johnson stung McVey in their meeting until he had the Oxnard "Vagrant" running into the tules, but if Martin digs in as Madden says he will there will be a fight worth going miles to see.



JACK MUNROE, THE MINER BOXER OF MONTANA, WHO WILL TACKLE THE WORLD'S CHAMPION.

JEFFRIES SAYS:

"Well I'm glad to learn that Munroe has accepted my offer to fight in Los Angeles. I haven't heard from him myself yet, but suppose I will tonight sometime.

"Of course I will commence training right away in this city, so as to get into condition again. My brother Jack and Joe Kennedy will be my trainers. Delaney started for San Francisco tonight, and of course has not heard the news."

Jim Scanlan, the Pittsburgh middleweight, who has made several good fights in Australia, is back from the Antipodes and has issued several challenges. He professes to be anxious to fight Jeffries. Scanlan is a little bigger than Fitzsimmons—not much.

Jack O'Keefe and Willie Fitzgerald are down for a Port Huron date September 15. Coast sporting men will be interested to see how this pair of Britt's marks stack up together, and if any of the Coast tricks they have learned will prove of service to them.

Down in old Chelsea they are now touting Sandy Ferguson as a second John L. Sullivan. He will run up against Gus Ruhlin next week, and if Mr. Ferguson does not then get his, we will be surprised.

M'VEY "IN IT."

FINED HEAVILY AS "VAG."

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

VENTURA, Sept. 5.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Sam McVey, the negro heavyweight of Oxnard, is of the opinion that his lines in these times are not cast in pleasant places. He was arrested in Oxnard and the low-down crime of vagrancy was charged against him. He did not go to the foul little Oxnard calaboose because he put up the necessary $200 bail. When the time came for him to appear before the bar of justice things did not look just right to him. The Oxnard justice had been making it pretty warm for "vags," and the mighty Sam thought a change of venue would be good for [illegible] had that his case be assigned to Justice Mehn of Huenem[illegible] McVey is sorry he spoke, for he was convicted in Mehn's court and fined $300. This, with its alternative on the Ventura rock pile, staggered the "culled wondah." Six months breaking rock was to be considered, as was $200 in good yellow gold. Beside, what was the oug to do if "time" was called in his fight with "Denver" Ed Martin in Los Angeles, and he breaking rock in far Ventura. Then his backer, Roche, is booked to forfeit $500 if his man is not on hand for that fight the 15th inst. The happy thought of an appeal to the Superior Court was the next move in McVey's case, so he will be on hand for the fight, but after the smoke of battle has cleared away, what?

TURF.

ALL-AGE KING IS WATERBOY.

Wins Rich Century Stakes in an Easy Gallop.

Superiority Established and New Record Made.

Favorite Hermis Badly Beaten in the Great Race at Sheepshead Bay.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.—P.M.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 5.—Amid the rousing cheers of 25,000 people, J. B. Haggin's Waterboy, ridden by O'Neil, won the $22,000 Century Stakes at Sheepshead Bay today. The big son of Watercress, who was crowned champion of the all-age division in the early part of the season, today settled all question of his superiority by his easy victory. He broke the track record for one mile and a half by covering the distance in 2:31 3-5, which is two-fifths of a second faster than the previous best time, which was made by Water Color in 1901. Waterboy was third choice in the betting, closing at 4 to 1. This year's American Derby winner, The Picket, was second and Heno third. The field that faced the starter was probably the best and most evenly matched of the year. Only five horses paraded, with Hermis always a warm favorite at 9 to 5, Heno being second choice at 12 to 5.

After a few moments' delay at the post they were sent away to a good start. Before they had covered an eighth of a mile Odom sent Hermis to the front, Waterboy being second and Heno in third place. This order was maintained passing the stand the first time. Hermis was full of running and fighting for his head, but Odom had a strong hold on him. Around the paddock they swept, with Hermis two lengths in front of Waterboy, who was leading The Picket by about three-quarters of a length. Rounding the far turn O'Neil sent Waterboy up to the leader. The pair ran like a team for a few strides, then O'Neil gave his mount his head and he shot forward and soon had a commanding lead. From the head of the stretch to the wire, Waterboy just galloped and won easily by two and a half lengths from The Picket, who was four lengths in front of Heno. Hermis was fourth, six lengths back. British Talent to Combine on Yacht Challenger.

Whole Nation Besmirched by Shamrock's Defeat.

Committee of Experts Proposed to Plot Against Immovable American Trophy.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON (England) Sept. 5.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] There is talk of a combination of shipbuilders, designers and yacht experts to build a British boat to challenge for the America's cup, the idea being that the combined talent might achieve what an individual has failed to do. Mr. Callway, manager of the Thorneycroft Company who built Shamrock I, said in an interview today that the Thorneycrofts would readily join such a committee of experts. The continual defeats of the Shamrocks, he declared, were not good advertisement for British skill, but they were not defeats for the shipbuilders.

"On the contrary," Mr. Callway said, "they are simply defeats for two particular yacht designers, whose designs the builders carry out. Unfortunately the world fixes the slur of failure on the builders, saying that England cannot built a yacht equal to the Americans.

That is nonsense, but the fact remains that these defeats, in the world's view, have besmirched the country's laurels in one of the greatest and most famous of its trades.

"There ought not to be the least difficulty in the builders, designers and experts cooperating. There are now most valuable precedents and experiences to go upon. The committee will have first to consider the varying points of the boat concerned in Sir Thomas Lipton's contests and discuss the choice of a designer. Other details will come later, until we produce a yacht which will be really representative of the country's skill."

SOMEBODY BLUNDERED.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

LONDON, Sept. 5.—Considerable comment has been caused by a special dispatch from New York to the Daily Mail, declaring that a mistake in connection with Shamrock III's water line made her defeat a foregone conclusion. The correspondent says it is the strangest the error in the design was not discovered in time to prevent the formation of the unwarranted hopes by which Sir Thomas Lipton had been deceived, and intimates that someone blundered inexcusably. The friends of Sir Thomas in London are much exercised. They declare they are quite unable to see how the water-line mistake occurred, nor can one explain will the forthcoming.

RECEPTION TO LIPTON.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

WALTER TRAVIS REGAINS GOLF CHAMPIONSHIP.

DEFEATS EBEN BYERS EASILY IN GREAT AMATEUR MATCH.

Veteran Shows Great Superiority in Approaching and Putting, Placing the Ball With Machine-like Accuracy at Short Distances—Large Crowd Sees Play.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.—P.M.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 5.—For the third time Walter J. Travis, representing the Garden City Golf Club, has won the amateur golf championship of the United States. He won his third victory today in the final 36-hole round of the national tournament on the links of the Nassau Country Club, at Glen Cove, L. I., by 3 up and 4 to play, Eben M. Byers of the Allegheny Country Club of Pittsburgh was the runner-up. Byers beat Travis in last year's championship by one hole, but the veteran champion of two preceding years had his revenge today. Travis played a superior golf, and while from the tees honors were about even, Travis was far ahead of his young opponent in approaching and putting. He approached with machine-like accuracy and the sureness of his putting at from 3 to 10 feet was a feature.

A very large crowd was present to see the championship play. By his victory Travis establishes his right to hold the title for the coming year and gained the championship cup presented several years ago by the late Theodore Havemeyer. In addition he received a gold medal from the United Golf Association. Eighteen holes were played in the morning and eighteen in the afternoon.

At the start Byers led Travis by one hole on the ninth green. Travis won the tenth, tieing the match. The eighth was halved and Travis won the ninth. After honors were all even on the tenth green, Travis won the next three holes, Byers then won two, but Travis took the last three, giving him the substantial lead of four holes for the first part of the match. Travis's score for the eighteen holes was 73 strokes to 79 for Byers.

Miserable putting by Byers lost him the sixteenth and seventeenth holes. Travis secured the substantial lead of four holes for the first eighteen holes of the first round. Cards for the two rounds were:

Travis—out, 38; in, 35; total, 73.
Byers—Out, 37; in, 42; total, 79.
Travis—Out, 40; in, 21; total, 61.
Byers—Out, 40; in, 22; total, 62.

HOMING PIGEONS.

TRIAL FLIGHT TODAY.

The members of the Los Angeles Homing Club will have a trial flight of young birds today from Tehachepi, Kern county, to this city, thirty-two young birds having been sent from here to Tehachepi yesterday. They will be liberated at the summit town this morning, and it is expected they will make the distance in from two to three hours. J. D. Klein sent twelve birds, and J. A. Jefferson three, these going together. E. Phipps sent seventeen in a separate coop. This flight is a preparatory one for the regular, 100-mile young bird flight from Bakersfield next Sunday.

LIPTON GAINS POINT THOUGH HE LOSES.

SOME fifty-odd years ago the good schooner yacht America met and defeated the best English boats and brought to this country a bit of silver which has since become famous as "The America's Cup."

At irregular times since then English yachtsmen have endeavored to build a boat which would come to America and show a clean pair of heels to the Yankee boat. Yacht building in America has, however, kept pace with other lines of development, and each effort on the part of the English to recapture the cup or trophy has proved futile in the extreme. The latest aspirant for yachting honors is, as it well known, Sir Thomas J. Lipton; and each alternate year, for six years, has seen this Irishman cross the dancing blue waves of the Atlantic with heart full of earnestness, and if we are to believe what he says, with hopes that he would be the lucky man to bring the cup back to England, and so reestablish the leadership and prestige of England in the yachting world. Three times has the doughty Irishman gone down to defeat, and Thursday last saw him get the most decisive beating that he has ever received at the hands of an American boat.

Interest in this contest has been universal, and away out here in California, three thousand miles from the scene of the races, every man, woman and child, almost, has been praying for the American boat. That the people of Los Angeles are godly and righteous is strongly evident from the fact that their prayers have been answered, and Lipton limps back home defeated out of hand.

There is a gentleman in this city who has followed the course of each one of Lipton's yachts, has met the gallant Irishman, and is in constant correspondence with other gentlemen in the East who are prominent in the financial, social and business world; he also knows a number of the members of the New York Yacht Club. In talking of the series of races just completed, this gentleman spoke substantially as follows:

"The so-called sentimental attitude toward Sir Thomas Lipton gives me somewhat of a tired feeling, because, unless I mistake my guess, Sir Thomas is not at all dissatisfied with the outcome of the races. Mind you, I do not say that every effort was not made on the part of the Shamrock and her Irish owner to win the cup, and when he landed on these shores, I presume it was expected by Sir Thomas that he would take back home that little bit of tarnished silver, worth about $250, tucked under his arm, and be acclaimed the greatest sportsman in all England.

"Columns have been written in the daily press of the country about the enormous expenditure of money made by Sir Thomas in his three consecutive efforts to get the cup. The papers have been filled with accounts of this Irish baronet's efforts, and people have stood aghast when they contemplated the figures, running well into the millions for the three races. It seems to me that the wool has been pretty well pulled over the eyes of the American people, and that they have lost sight of one thing, and that is that Sir Thomas J. Lipton is one of the greatest business men that ever lived on this earth. He is immensely wealthy; his teas and whiskies are well known from one end of the world to the other, and he believes in advertising. He spends so much each year for that purpose, and it matters not to him whether it is in the form of newspapers, bill posters or yacht racing. He has spent all his life in devising schemes for advertising his goods.

"I am in receipt of a letter from a wealthy and prominent gentleman of New York, under date of August 29, and I want to quote you the following:

"'The Shamrock III never had a ghost of a show, and Lipton says that until the other side gets a man like Herreshoff there is no chance of the cup leaving us. I guess that Sir Thomas was very much disappointed this time, for he thought, and was told, that he had the world leader in the Shamrock III. I am sure that the whole affair was only an advertising scheme on Lipton's part. I was told the other day by a man that knows that Lipton used to spend between $800,000 and $1,000,000 a year in advertising his teas and whiskies in our large cities. When he sent over the Shamrock I he canceled all his advertising contracts. Now his boat racing advertising costs him less than one-half, and brings him in ten times the results, financially, besides keeping him before the people as a dead game sport. In fact, defeat means more than winning. I have seen the beats a number of times, and the Shamrock is a beauty, but the Reliance is the loveliest thing that ever appeared out on the ocean.'

"If I did not know the writer of this letter to be a gentleman of integrity, and from what I know of other circumstances connected with this yacht race, about which I am personally cognizant, I would be tempted to take his statement cum grano salis, but after the race between the Shamrock I and the sturdy old Colombia, I met a gentleman who had formerly been in the employ of Sir Thomas Lipton, and once when he appeared to be somewhat under the influence of Scotch whisky, he delivered himself of a little speech which goes to prove that my New York friend is right in his surmise. Among other things he averred that the first series between the Shamrock I and the Columbia cost Sir Thomas between $500,000 and $700,000, and that the sale of Lipton's goods, teas and whiskies, the year following the race, netted the dead game sport something over $3,000,000 more than he had made the year previous to his challenge. I saw this series of races as well as those between the Shamrock II and the Colombia, and I must say that the English creations are beautiful in form and outline, but they lack the speed and stamina which the unassuming Nat Herreshoff gies to the American boats. At no time since Sir Thomas began his efforts to win the America's cup has there been the least danger of its loss, so long as the American boat floated on an even keel.

"There is also an interesting bit of news connected with the sailing of the second series, that is between the Shamrock II and the Columbia. If you will hark back to that time, you will recollect that Herreshoff built a boat called the Constitution, and it was confidently expected this boat completed, this gentleman spoke substantially as follows: would be the defender that year of the America's cup. The preliminary series between the Constitution and the Columbia, was in favor of the first boat, but somewhere about the middle of the yachting season the Constitution appeared to go back, and, as is well known, the Columbia was chosen for the second time to show the Irishman what he did not know about boats. The success of the Columbia is a matter of history, but there is this bit of interesting news in that direction. The Constitution was a better boat than the Columbia in every way, shape and form; she could out-sail her in any wind, on any tack, and in any kind of weather; but a reliable line had been obtained on the Shamrock II by the American yachting experts, and the members of the New York Yacht Club saw that if the Constitution was pitted against the Shamrock, the latter boat's defeat would be so decisive and absolute that it would prevent racing for years to come; therefore, the Constitution was held back and the Columbia sent out to do battle, as she did in a very successful manner. This charge was made by me in the presence of members of the New York Yacht Club at the close of the second series of races, and a denial was not forthcoming.

"Now let your mind travel back a few weeks, when the Reliance, Constitution and Columbia were racing to see which one was to have the honor of defending the cup this year, and just notice how positively the Constitution beat the Columbia. It is proof positive that the Constitution always was a better boat than the Columbia. The question now arises, have we reached the top notch in yacht building, and will we stand still in the future? In other words, is the Reliance the perfection of marine craft sailing in yachting contests? The answer is (and we think it is truly given) that so long as lives Nat Herreshoff, the quiet, unassuming, bashful, diffident builder, so long will he be able to turn out a boat each year which will be better than its predecessor. Even now, at the conclusion of the third series of races, this great yacht builder is getting out plans, drawing lines, making experiments, etc., whereby he may be able to turn out something even better than the Reliance.

"There is another element to be taken into consideration in these yacht races, and that is Charles Barr, the astute, quiet, Scotch-born American sailor. What he does not know about sailing a boat, and what he does not know about the Jersey coast and the waters adjacent thereto, is not worth knowing, and the efficient way in which he handles the American boat does much to augment the merits of Herreshoff.

"The foregoing is not said in depreciation of Sir Thomas Lipton, because I have met him personally, and know him to be one of the most gentlemanly, whole-souled men in the world, and he is a good sport. But he combines his sportmanship and business ingenuity and makes the American people pay for his yachts, his races, and his fun, and he thereby increases the sale of Lipton's teas and whiskies."

THE BARBER FAILED TO SHAVE LOOLOOS.

SIWASHES HAD GOOD VIEW OF THE ENTIRE GAME.

Doctor Newton Rolled His Pills in a Very Expert Manner—Home Runs by Dillon and Lumley—No Outbreaks by the Players.

Los Angeles, 11; Seattle, 5.

The Looloos didn't even get any kind of a race from Barber yesterday, much less a close one.

He was shamrocked from the time the starting gun was fired and at the outer mark was seven miles in the rear. He could never get into the wind and the locals simply boomed out their flails into the wind and sailed home with speed to blow away.

Skipper Newton directed the cruise for the locals and under his guidance the foreigners had a beautiful view of the race, for they were always in the rear where they could see it. It was a straight run before the breeze, but very frequently the Looloos tacked on Barber's starboard quarter and forged a few miles ahead just to show him that the Siwashes have no chance to lift the pennant.

Two home runs enlivened the proceedings for the 1500 fans and both came in the first inning. Lumley opened the Siwash chapter and swiped the ball pitched over the right field fence. It went so high and so far away that a lot of the fans thought the ball was going to tear the roof off the Chutes Theater, but he did lose it however. In the first for the Looloos Dummy drew a pass and then Wheeler and Corbett were easy infield outs. Dillon pasted the ball in his turn to the center fence and it bounded over for one of those scratchy home runs that are frequently made.

The hitting was hard at all times and the ball was knocked six ways for Sunday. Andrews, Jansing, Corbett and Barber were the only ones who could not swat safely. With the exception of Jansing, each of this bunch hit the ball every time at bat, but Jansing fanned out three times. Cravath and Newton were the recipients of the extra base line, each making three hits. Toman, Byers and Lumley also connected and the old reliable run-getter Hoy, made two runs without a hit.

The locals scored in the first on Barber in the first round. Dummy getting a pass and loping in ahead of Dillon, when he bounced his center-field fly over the fence for a home run. In the second Toman walked and was forced at second by Spies. Spies stole second and went to third on a bad throw down of Byers. He scored on Newton's hit to center. The four in the third started with Corbett being hit by Barber. Dillon was safe at the initial on Brashear's muff of Dillon's grounder to Andrews, and then Ross, Toman, Spies and Newton followed in succession with singles, and the runs piled in. Cravath scored on his own triple to right and Toman's single, and in the seventh Dillon went across on singles by himself and Cravath, a fielder's choice and an infield out. The final runs in the eighth were made on Dummy's gift, Wheeler's fielder's choice that didn't result in an out, and an error of Jansing.

The Siwashes got their first on Lumley's home run, and the next two on errors by Wheeler and Toman and hard singles by Byers, Barber and Mohler. The last one was made on singles by Lumley, Brashear and Zinsser.

CHANGE OF TIME.

The ball game today will begin as usual at 2:30 o'clock, and hereafter all week-day games will commence at the same time. There has been some complaint by the fans because the post time was 2 o'clock, and in deference to a popular demand the games will be called at 2:30 o'clock. No one should forget the change of time.

There were two games scheduled for tomorrow, but only the afternoon game will be played. The fans should remember that there is no morning game tomorrow, and that the afternoon performance will start promptly at 2:30 o'clock.

'FRISCO'S WATERLOO.

BEATEN ELEVEN TO ONE.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

SACRAMENTO, Sept. 5.—San Francisco was beaten from the start of the game today, as the Sacramentos made four runs in the first two innings and gained four more in the fourth. Howell, the Visalia amateur, was wild and could not use his speed. Brown pitched a masterly game, allowing only two hits, one of which was a scratch, up to the eighth inning. Nor did any of the visitors reach second base up to that stage of the game. Score:

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 5.—Butler, the big Portland pitcher, lost two innings today, and was then taken out of the box. In the second Oakland lit upon his delivery for six hits and five runs, and the play was virtually decided. Thielman pitched the balance of the game, and kept the few hits against him scattered. Strong Pitchers in Coast Co... Brief Breezy Bits About Baseball Boys.

By long odds the baseball feature last week in Coast sporting was the terrific clouting administered to the ball by certain players in Portland, Sacramento, Los Angeles and Seattle teams. Averaging the series as a whole, that played at Sacramento and the local exhibitions swat were of the kind that delighted the old-timers who used to watch the Dan Brouthers and the other Lajoies of his time.

Figures up to the middle of the week show that Morley's pitchers as a rule have set the other league twirlers an unusual pace for boxmen to follow. Discounting Joe Corbett, who three hits a day last week became as regular as to become monotonous, having been at second base most of the time, and beginning with the regular pitchers, Sawbones Newton presents an average of .571 for the series, and Rusty Hall is not far behind with

ASCOT PARK TRACK WORK.

Improvements Being Rushed to Completion.

Grand Stand Foundation to be Begun Tuesday.

Fifteen Horse Barns Now Built. Private Water Plant. Fine Car Service.

Bright and early Tuesday the small army of workmen now busily engaged in rushing the new Ascot Park race track to completion will begin work on the cement foundation of the big grand stand that is to be the central figure in this new sport and amusement place on Vermont avenue between South Park and Central avenues.

The magnitude of the race track work can be estimated when it is stated that when completed and ready for the meet scheduled to begin on Christmas Day, the investment will represent about $250,000, exclusive of the cost of the tract of 160 acres of land. It is said about $75,000 will go into the grand stand, for it is to be a modern structure in every way and will represent all the latest ideas for convenience and comfort in buildings of this kind.

It will be 300 feet long and 107 feet wide and the framework will be entirely of steel, to insure permanency and strength. There will be lavatories and dressing-rooms for ladies, a clubroom for men, and a thoroughly modern restaurant where meals will be served at all times. Quick car service will be a feature of the enterprise for the park will be reached by five lines, one being the Main street, Maple avenue, Central avenue, Long Beach and San Pedro lines. Some of these, or possibly all of them, will run their cars to the grounds to a point within a few feet of the grand stand, thus affording quick and easy communication with all parts of the city. Little or no dust will bother the racing enthusiasts, for the ground around the grand stand and beneath it to the inner fence of the track will be covered with an asphalt cement.

The grand stand will face the east, north of it will be the saddling paddock, connected with the stand by a covered walk. Opposite the stand and some thirty to fifty feet from the outside fence of the track, will be the row of barns for the horses. There will be twenty-five of these barns, half of them to contain twenty stalls and the other half forty stalls. They will be some three feet above the level of the ground, in order to insure perfect ventilation and a trainer or owner can stand in the door of any of his stalls and watch any race around the track.

Three of the barns are now practically completed and the framework is ready to be more. Considerable delay has been experienced on all the work through the apparent scarcity of lumber, but it is hoped the conditions will be changed this week. The ten-foot board fence that surrounds the park is finished and larger crews of men will be put on all the work this week, in order to rush it.

Ample provision has been made for a water supply for irrigation purposes and to protect the property against fire. The Jockey Club owning its own waterworks. Fire hydrants will be put in each barn, to furnish water for the horses. The barns are being built in the midst of an orchard of young English walnut trees, and water will be supplied these trees in large quantities. It is the intention of the club to beautify the park in every possible way. Grass lawns will be sowed, palms and flowers set out, and everything done to make the place attractive.

The men behind the Jockey Club are those of cumulative evidence that the sport will be conducted in a first-class manner. Epes Randolph, president of the club, and J. A. Muir, its treasurer, are both prominent officials of the Los Angeles Railway Company, and are men favorably known in business circles in this city. John J. Fay, Jr., is vice-president of the club and J. W. Brooks is manager. Mr. Brooks is a horseman known all over the United States, and he promises a race meeting at Ascot Park that will equal any ever held on the Coast. Other directors of the club are William G. Kerckhoff, the banker; J. M. Hale, the druggist-street merchant, and W. E. Dunn, the attorney, of the firm of Dunn & Crutcher.

The architect and builder of the grand stand, stables and paddock is A. Harris, a man of national reputation as a builder of race tracks and racing stables. He put up the buildings at the Chicago Hawthorne track and also the Tanforan track near San Francisco, and declares that the Ascot buildings will be the equal of his former successes in every way. He declares that the improvements he is making at the park are not surpassed for running horses, for it is the intention of the club to encourage harness racing at the track; also automobiles and bicycles, football games, and in fact every form of athletic sport that could be given at the park.

HARES AND HOUNDS.

COURSING STAKES TODAY.

The sport that promises to be in evidence will come off at the coursing park today when the Los Angeles Coursing Club will run off two stakes. The most important one to the leash-men is the eight-dog champion event, in which the best local dogs are entered in addition to several cracks from the kennels around San Francisco. The chief center of interest in this stake will be the appearance of Lost Chord, a recent purchase of L. Corder of this city. Lost Chord is a hound well known to the fancy all over the west as having run second to the famous Sacramento Boy in the last John Grace cup stake. Chord has beaten about as many good dogs as any other hound in the country, and if he holds up to his reputation he should make the best of them step to win the stake.

The other number on the card is a twenty-eight-dog open stake for the hounds not in the champion event. The drawing is as follows:

Champion stake—Wapse and Prompto, Aeolus and Modest Beauty, Lost Chord and St. Louis, Golden Garter and Galveston.

Open stake—Regal Attire and Jim Choate, Bright Fortune and Maj. Mason, Queen of Isles and Shoo Fly, Sad Sam and Gay City, Royal Spirit and Castle Bluney Boy, Royal Union and Strayaway, Rock Island Minnie and Rien Array, Flower of Gold and Master Wallace, True Still and Media, Pazassas and Real Pasha, Romping Girl and Farmer Girl, Mollie Haskins and Runaway Actress, Merciless and Miss Brummel, Red Hot and Tom King.

EARLY TRAINING IS LIKELY TO DO HARM.

COMMON MISTAKE MADE BY YOUNG SCHOOL ATHLETES.

Ample Time for Rigorous Athletic Preparation After College—Too Much Hard Work Defeats Purpose, So is Discouraged—Football Facts.

There is such a thing as trying too hard to win in business, athletics or courtship, says the Illustrated Sport News. Some years ago, considerable agitation was aroused by the discovery that the college football season was being pushed so far back into the summer that it threatened to overlap the previous year, and that the preparatory ordeal added a month and more to the tough campaign of the autumn.

By common agreement, this over-anxious rehearsal period was lightened and curtailed, in order that an overdose of football might not work to the serious detriment of the strong young men engaged in the struggle for the survival of the fittest.

It is to be regretted that a large number of lads still in the preparatory schools have the summer practice idea, and that they are taking themselves and their athletics too seriously for their own good.

Interscholastic champions and the ambitious army of those who want to be, can get all the football that is wholesome for their bodies and minds between September and Thanksgiving time.

Overtraining and undue exertion are more weighty dangers for youths between 15 and 18 than for their elders in college, and the tendency to make overdrafts on their strength is more generally present in the headlong enthusiasm of the "prep" school athlete. It sounds a bit like trying "too hard to win."

There has been also some talk about an international meet of interscholastic athletic teams, between the school boys of England and the United States. This project, coupled with the ardor of football practice, en masse, in midsummer, calls for a few gentle words of criticism. The wholesome rivalries among themselves, in the seasons reasonably allotted to certain sports, are wholesome enough, but athletics must not be overdone.

Most of these young men are preparing to enter various universities where they will find the athletic interests sufficiently absorbing to satisfy them, and the task to please the coach and the professor with the little book, in which he marks the quality of their recitations, quite enough burden for both shoulders.

But if in their preparatory schools athletics are allowed to gain a prominence beyond their place in school life, the results will be demoralizing. It is not easy steering college men along a moderate and balanced course, and they must be held back from, rather than encouraged to take active interest in sports.

It is most impressively true of lads in the preparatory schools that no football championship is to be won in November is worth straining and sweating and puffing and worrying over in the middle of the previous summer. The minds of youths who begin training so early get into a football rut, and they think too much football and too little else during the next four months.

There are other interests in their busy lives just as important, although they may not see it that way, being sometimes blinded by the cloud of dust kicked up by the cyclonic activity that goes with those fine young years, "when one doesn't know what it is to be tired."

MILITARY MARKSMEN SHOOTS AT SEAGIRT.

RIFLE AND REVOLVER SHOTS HOLD ANNUAL TOURNAMENT.

National Match Competition by Teams from All Four Branches of Service. Wimbledon Cup and Bronze Soldier of Marathon Prizes.

The annual tournament of the National Rifle Association of America and the United States Revolver Association is in progress at Seagirt, since Wednesday and will conclude Saturday. The principal event, the National Match, open to teams of twelve men each from the United States Army, the United States Navy, the United States Marine Corps and the National Guard of the various States, will be decided Tuesday and Wednesday of this week.

The shooting in this match is at 200, 600, 800, 900 and 1000 yards, each competitor to fire ten shots at each range; positions standing at 200 yards; prone at the head toward target at all other ranges; arms, United States service rifle and carbines, with not less than a three-pound trigger pull; ammunition, regulation service cartridge; entrance, $24 per team.

The team making the highest score will receive $500 in cash and the national trophy valued at $1000 and authorized by Congress to be competed for annually. The second team will receive $300 in cash and the Hilton trophy, to be competed for annually; third team, $200 in cash and the bronze Soldier of Marathon, to be competed for annually, and the fourth, fifth and sixth teams $150, $100 and $50 in cash respectively.

The next contest of importance will be for the Wimbleton Cup. Then follows the President's match for the military championship of the United States, open to all members of the army, navy, Marine Corps, Naval Reserves and the National Guard.

The West Point-Annapolis match will be open to teams of five cadets from the two academies.

The United States Revolver Association will pull off its national matches at the same time. There will be four contests in all. Match A will be for the revolver championship of the country, open to everybody. Match B for the pistol championship, open to everybody. Match C will be for the military championship, and Match D will be for the military record match, open to everybody.

SCHEUTZEN PLANS.

PARK OPENS NEXT SUNDAY.

The informal opening of the new Schuetzen Park north of Eastlake will take place one week from today, although no work has been done on any part of the plant other than the shooting range, which is in good enough shape for the monthly medal contest of the Turners, which is the occasion.

There will be a bulls's head breakfast, plenty of barbecued meats for the shooters and something to drink, but as the association is not in shape to offer guests anything else owing to the incompleteness of the establishment, no one but shooters can be accommodated, or are desired. The opening at this time is in deference to the riflemen who are very impatient. All the target enthusiasts will be welcomed, whether Turnfers or not. The grand, formal opening will take place in about three months.

AUTO CLUB RUN.

GOING TO POMONA TODAY.

Today the Los Angeles Automobile Club will have another of its enjoyable runs to Pomona and back. The start will be made from Cowan's garage at 9 o'clock and nine or ten Oldsmobiles will participate. Each will have a guest or two. They will have dinner in Pomona and will spend some time in running around the town.

Jim Jeffries and Chalk Roberts, with a party of friends, hired a big touring car Tuesday for a run to Baldwin's and the San Gabriel winery. They had a very enjoyable trip.

City and Houseboat Fleet of Old Street Cars.

A TERMINAL NOVELTY.

IMAGINE thirty or forty old street cars—the kind that were used in Los Angeles as far back as the '90's—all remodeled and handsomely fitted up for living apartments; some placed on scows and resting on the glassy waters of the briny deep, and others carefully laid out in a long row, facing on a pretty street that leads from ocean to harbor, with shade trees and numerous electric lights strung along the pathway to denote that something real lively and up to date has actually been accomplished—then, and then only, will you have a correct impression of the beautiful little settlement, appropriately called "Railroad City," that is to be located at Terminal Island.

Such, in brief, is the novel scheme of Jack Jenkins, a prominent member of the South Coast Yacht Club, who has purchased a number of old street cars and started in to make the thing a "go."

In the East a few years ago the houseboat idea grew to be one of the cherished pleasures of the yachtsmen. To leave their places of business in the large cities for at least one or two days a week, go to the seashore and find rest and recreation, and plenty of it, too, was, indeed, a great comfort. It was the plain, everyday life of the average fisherman, who knows no other mode of living than that of the bachelor, and would prefer to do his own cooking, make his own bed and clean his own shack rather than have some one else do it for him, that attracted the many lovers of water sports in that section of the country. And this, it is thought, will make the houseboat scheme in Southern California an important feature in yachtcraft.

While there are a few who have seen fit to discourage Jenkins's plans, the majority of yachtsmen regard the scheme as unique and a valuable addition to the comforts offered them at Terminal. That it will prove a success from the start is the firm belief of all who have studied the project.

It is interesting to go through the houseboats now in course of construction, and to survey the plans that are to be used in building the others. First of all there is the scow, a well-built flatboat, capable of holding its own on waters that are not too rough and stormy. Then comes the street car—merely the frame, which is inclosed on all sides and newly covered with thick canvas. An overhanging deck of from three to five feet is left bare, so that the occupants may enjoy the days and evenings without. Inside the boats will be found most of the comforts of home life. The walls are to be coated with burlap, while the ceilings will be painted white. In one corner of the car-boat is a folding bed, large enough to accomodate two persons, and there are plenty of lockers strewn along each side, which may be used as seats when needed. The rear of each boat will be partitioned off and used both for kitchen and toilet purposes, while a large tank, with a capacity of holding twenty or thirty gallons of water, according to the size of the boat, will be fastened just below the roof of the partition.

Jenkins is having several houseboats built larger than others; that is to say, he is using two cars each on some of the scows, instead of one. He is also having a small launch built, which is to serve as a tugboat for towing the boats around to different parts of the inner and outer harbors. This little craft will make regular daily trips to all of the boats, and in case provisions or anything of that sort are desired by the occupants, it will secure and deliver them.

Another feature in connection with Jenkins's novel idea is the new street that he is to open. About nineteen or twenty of the cars will be strung out in a line and fitted up equally as well as the houseboats, but they will be stationary. It is thought this scheme will take better with the yachtsmen than the former, inasmuch as the apartments will be easier of access. However, there are a number of applicants already for the houseboats, and Jenkins says that if the demand proves greater than the supply he will build more at once.

The cost of carrying these plans out is greater than might at first be supposed. The double houseboats, or those of two cars, will foot up to about $500 each when completed, while the smaller ones, or those with only one car, will be nearly $300. The cars that are made stationary will probably cost about $200 each. It is the intention to rent them by the week and month, the rates ranging from $5 to $15 a week.

ODDITIES OF THE CORBINA.

Tricks and Habits of the Game Surf Fish.

Creature That is Little Known But is Often Taken.

Hints About the Best Reels, Rods and Other Gear Used in the Fishing.

In the hearts of many shore fishermen there stands one little nook consecrated to the memory of the corbina. The tuna anglers may have their big game; the yellowtail trollers may take their amber-sided beauties as they will; the men who fish in the bay may pin their faith to the game silver-backed croaker, but there is a small percentage of the angler—sportsmen of the south coast, who when age has palsied their hands and all is dead but memory will remember with keen pleasure the days they have spent on wharf or in the beach casting for "surf fish."

Of all the marine game that frequents Southern California's shores, none is more generally known and less generally understood than the corbina. Scientists define him as a member of the kingfish family; the "California whiting" and attach to him the specific name of Menticirrus undulatus. But they do not know anything about him that is of service to the angler other than that he appears to be a migratory chap with some strange, inexplicable whims, common on the coast this month and rare the next; running big today and of very small size next week. They also know, as does every shore fisherman, that the corbina are among the cleanest feeders of all fish, subsisting almost entirely upon small marine crustaceans and bivalve mollusks of various sorts, such as clams, cockles, mussels and the like. Such of their habits as are known are those divulged by the fish themselves in their quests for food. One realizes that they are almost essentially a surf-feeding fish from the nature of their diet, though they are sometimes taken at the ends of the wharves in as much as fifteen or twenty feet of water.

Before dealing with the corbina as an individual it might be well to recollect that he is a very close relative of the much-despised "tom cod," which is not a tom cod at all, but the true kingfish. This family, which embraces all the croakers and the yellowfins, as well as the corbina, contains beyond question the best shore-feeding game fishes of Southern California and has a warm place in the regard of every angler.

In considering the habits of the corbina or surf fish with a view to ascertaining the most successful way to take him, the essentially surf-frequenting habits of the splendid creature show he must be sought where the tide beats in sufficiently hard to stir up the sand crabs and other marine delicacies upon which he feeds. To take surf fish outside the breakers, or indeed in deep water, is not an unheard of thing, though it is uncommon.

Being usually found off some beach where the sand crabs wax plentiful and fat, or where beds of succulent clams, cockles and other shell fish are constantly dying, or emitting some such easily-obtained food as their spawn, the corbina naturally bites better at some of these natural baits than at anything else, though when hungry, which is seldom, they will yield to necessity just as man or any other animal does. The taking of the corbina resolves itself into an effort to present the fish with something as nearly resembling its daily food as possible. For this reason, there are certain sections of the southern coast where the fish seem to prefer the soft shell sand crab to anything else, though day in and day out carefully cut soft clam bait will lure them better than anything else. In the preparation of this there is considerable art. The size of the baits is regulated not only by the size of fish sought, but by the way they may be biting at the time. Corbina when not hungry take delight in nipping off big baits and securing a replete belly at a minimum of cost. They are extremely difficult to capture at such times, but by resorting to small hooks and proportionate baits fair results may sometimes be obtained. A run of little fish of the "nipper" size is usually responsible for promiscuous stealing of bait. At such times there is a merry squealing of reels, swishing of rod tips, and a pleasurable air of excitement, but very few fish. In choosing a bait for any given day, one does well to experiment if he has a variety to offer, for corbina, like trout or any other game fish, do not always have the same fancies.

There are two principal ways of taking corbina for sporting purposes. The easiest and most generally followed is casting from the wharves. A small percentage of the old-time anglers, who know the coast and can get more fish by throwing out off the beach follow that method and usually make it profitable. For the wharf work an elastic lancewood, greenheart or split bamboo rod of eight feet in length, agate mounted is a very serviceable bit of equipment. For shore casting nothing beats a ten or twelve foot length of cane one-fourth inch in diameter at the tip. That with 100 yards of cuttyhunk line of fifteen or eighteen thread, a brass side reel of the "amateur" type and a six ounce claw sinker to anchor the line against the undertow makes an outfit which can be put together for $2.50 and will answer every purpose. The wharf tackle is often an edition de luxe, costing from $20 to $60. Of late a number of steel casting rods have been tried by surf fishermen and many profess to like them well though the action is inferior to well seasoned greenheart or lancewood. Multiplying reels of all prices are now favorites for wharf angling and in the last two years there has been a pronounced move toward nine and twelve thread lines with the lighter sinkers made possible by such fine tackle.

Probably the most important part of a corbina outfit is the leader. This is a three or four hook affair with one hook placed below the sinker and the others above it just far enough apart to clear each other and hang free in the current. The two lower hooks catch most of the fish. Gut hooks, usually treble twisted are best, as they last longer and are less conspicuous in the water than some of the other kinds, while having the necessary strength. Of the style and shape of hooks a book might be written and the subject not exhausted. Local favorites are the turn down eye Pennell limerick or Pennel sprout. The long shanked Carlisles of heavy wire and the Cincinnati bass. This last is a splendid catching hook for all fish, but is weaker than the Pennells, which are the strongest small hooks made. In size they should run from No. 1 to No. 4, according to the fish. A No. 1 will take any corbina that swims if he be handled right.

In fishing for corbina great patience must be exercised, for the fish are among the slowest of biters. They nip several times before striking the steel generally, though when hungry enough they grab bait like any other fish. A safe rule is to set the reel click and wait until they start it. The heavy sinkers' hook many fish of themselves. Once hooked, a corbina should never have an inch of slack line or he will eject the hook. Heavy ones are best beached if such a thing be possible. The small fry are easily thrown out on the wharf.

Incoming tides at the time of great rise and fall during the moon's waxing are good times for corbina fishing, though no set rule can be laid down for the governing of their habits. On this coast there are two distinct types of coloration in the fish; the black and white corbina. No other difference than the coloring exists and it seems to be bear no relation to sex. Its cause, like many other peculiarities of the fish is shrouded in that mystery that envelops most of the sea's secrets.

SPORTSMAN MADE A LUCKY TUNA STRIKE.

UNUSUAL FISH ACTIVITY OFF SANTA BARBARA.

Reports Received of a Surprising September Haul by an Eastern Angler Who Waylaid a Run of Tuna and Yellowtail a Mile off Shore.

According to a telegram received here yesterday, excitement was caused in the morning among the sportsmen sojourning at the Potter Hotel, Santa Barbara, by a phenomenal September catch of fish made in the channel a mile out by one of their number, W. C. Campbell, a well-known Eastern sportsman.

The sportive fish of Southern California waters, especially the royal tuna, are supposed by this time practically to have finished their season, but to the immediate agitation of the devotees of the art of trolling at the Santa Barbara resort, the lucky Easterner caught in five hours, with rod and reel, four tuna, six yellowtail, and three bonita, with seven rock cod and eight rock bass for good measure. The haul was made from the hotel's new power launch Frances.

The remarkable run of tuna reported off Santa Barbara has the deep-sea anglers of that section by the ears. These gamiest of fish have made themselves conspicuous by their absence most of this season in their usual island feeding ground off this county, and their sudden reappearance after the supposed close of the season will renew the waning enthusiasm of amateur summer fishermen.

FISH PROSPECT.

CORBINA, TROUT AND BASS.

Small corbina have been plentiful at all the southern beach resorts the latter part of the past week. Some fine catches of yellow-bellied bass have been scored at the breakwater, and the sea trout have given the live-bait contingent several pleasant afternoons at Redondo.

Big yellowtails, perennially hungry, have cleaned out various Playa del Rey outfits for Capt. Smith's customers, and several men will go after them rigged for business today.

D. Botilier got seventeen "nipper" corbina Thursday at Brighton. Rex, his partner, had sixteen. Mr. Kremer and son Abe caught thirty-two. The largest was of two pounds weight; the average was small. Fishing at Terminal and off the rocks at East San Pedro is as good. Some good hauls of nippers were made at Redondo by the surf contingent, but the same tale of little fish has come up from that resort. Big ones are around, but they will not bite.

Del Rey has been productive of yellowfins in the evening. Plenty of halibut and small bass are to be had. The mackerel picnic is slower than usual at this season, but live bait for other fishing can be obtained easily enough.

Many will go to the breakwater today. Several trolling parties have arranged to make early starts for the yellowtail and barracuda feeding grounds.

The croaker fishing has been slower, but some fair catches are reported from Croaker Point in the bay.

All told, the outlook for sport all around is fair. With favorable weather the trollers will get many fish.

SPIER RETURNS.

NO FISH IN THE EAST.

"They talk so much about their bass fishing in the St. Lawrence. Well I had a good taste of it this summer, and I'll take the croakers and yellowfins in the bay hereafter," stated Simon Spier on his return last week from an extended business and pleasure trip comprising the Thousand Islands of the St. Lawrence, and that vicinity as far east as New York City.

"As a fair sample of the bass fishing they had while I was there, I remember one day when twelve boats were out and the total catch was twenty bass. When they get a bass weighing two and one-half pounds there the fisherman thinks he has done a wonderful thing."

"I caught a number of pickerel and they remind me more of our common barracuda than anything else. They make one fierce rush, and that is the end of their fighting. And as for gameness, our bay croakers have got the fresh water bass beaten a block."

"Yet the hotels all make a specialty of entertaining fishermen at rates that would drive a sportsman to drink. Minnows for bait, 5 cents per fish. You are asked if you want a boat, and if you do they hand you a man to row, a "guide" they call him. Then they ask you if you want an lunch. You do of course. They give you a chunk of beefsteak, onions and the rest, and about noon your "guide" goes ashore on some island and cooks you a very good dinner. This is all right, but it is also extra on the bill, though the hotels advertise rates at so much per day to fishermen. I think if a man had a boat of his own and plenty of time he might find some fair fishing, but the game they offer you is not worth the candle. I found the fishing this way in all the fresh water resorts I visited."

"Going down to New York I was too busy to fish. While I was there the striped bass were running in the Hudson, and the fishing was certainly good enough for anybody. The bluefish trollers were getting good sport in the sound, plenty of fish and big ones too. That part of my trip looked more like home than any other."

"I tell you what, we do not know or appreciate what fine sport we have right here in Southern California. A man has to go away to some of their eastern "fishing resorts" in order to get a good understanding of what we have here."

"There is one thing I feel compelled to 'hand it' to the St. Lawrence people upon, however, and that is the extreme ease and comfort of their boats. I am going to have one shipped out here. They are round bottomed, have chairs in them and are roomy as well as steady—just the thing for our bay fishing."

Mr. Spier brought several fine new rods back with him from the East and is outside today trying one of them on the yellowtail and barracuda.

Aging Kentucky Whisky.

Of the "crop" of 1903, the Kentucky distillers are making preparations for the exportation of 30,000 barrels of whisky to German ports for storage. This is a new idea, and is the first exportation in Kentucky history of any great amount of young whisky to be matured in Europe. It is a novel incident of the trade. The whisky to be sent abroad is intended largely for the trade in California and other Western States.—(Pittsburgh Post.

Nothing Left.

Damocles smiled as he glanced at the sword.

"But," inquired the puzzled Dionysius, "doesn't it even make you feel nervous?"

"Not a bit," said the brave young man, "I have just had a vacation haircut."

Shuddering at the mere thought, his host arose and shook his hand in silent sympathy.—(New York Sun.

SHOOTERS ARE WELL PLEASED.

Splendid Quail Outlook for Coming Season.

Birds Bred Liberally, and Great Year is Predicted.

California's Representative Game Bird, and Some of His Peculiarities.

Sportsmen throughout the South are rejoicing at the quail prospect.

With the opening of the shooting season five weeks away and more game in sight than for five years past, the fall fun on the hills bids fair to be another taste of old times. Those who love to hunt the bonnie blue birds on their native fastnesses, and the lanier contingent who are content to plug out their easy limit in the morning or evening when the quail are down on the flats feeding, have good reason for pleasant anticipation, for reports from all sections adjacent to the city are of the same tenor; plenty of breeding stock left over in the winter, and an excellent summer to raise young birds. Many country sportsmen who keep a close watch on the game report that two broods have been brought out, and even now travelers through the San Fernando Valley and other near-by shooters' resorts have seen the youngsters from all sizes from that of "bumblees up," as they facetiously put it. All these little chaps are the product of a second quail grist, and they will be quite competent to take care of themselves by October 15, for the laws of self-preservation are the first and indeed the only serious business of any young bird's education.

During the five or six years that preceded 1902 the quail shooting in Southern California was steadily on the wane. There seemed to be fewer birds every year, and many conservative sportsmen foresaw the end of the State's representative sport. Some laid the steady decrease to inefficient protective legislation; more charged it to an unusual series of dry and unfavorable seasons. For, be it known the valley quail has some peculiar intuitive sense that keeps it from breeding to any general extent in times of drought, with their attendant food scarcity. What instinct, for such it must be, prompts them to this wise measure has never been satisfactorily explained, but every shooter recognises the fact. Realizing that no supply of game even if apparently inexhaustible, could hold out long against the double drain of indiscriminate shooting and lack of breeding, a coterie of northern and local sportsmen banded themselves together some three years ago into an organization subsequently called the California Game and Fish Protective Association, did a little political work in their districts, sent a delegation to Sacramento and succeeded in having passed the first real game-protective measure that ever graced the Penal Code of this State. It stopped the market shooting of quail by the "No sale" clause, and fixed a twenty-five-bird bag limit per day. Both features of the law provoked a howl from the market interests, as was to be expected. "Class legislation" was the cry. Leading dealers of San Francisco, who had done more to rid California of one of its chief assets—its game—than any other body of men, raised a substantial fund for the purpose of breaking the law, but were forced to chalk up their coin to loss, and experience, for the law stood every test that was brought to the bar against it. Several Supreme Court decisions were rendered in its support, and it is now recognized as valid by the game dealers, though they profess to hold it as much "unconstitutional" as ever.

The law, and a pair of fortuitously favorable winters, stopped the ebbing of the quail tide. Two years ago this summer they bred in something like their old-time fertility. Just to show they had not lost the habit, The result was a smack of old times the first year the bag limit was in operation. Last year was better, and present indications promise the sport of kings this fall and winter.

Quail shooting is preeminently the poor man's game. He who would shoot ducks in Southern California must needs be "long" on this world's goods, for it is a costly diversion. There is but little open water, and that is shot out before the northern birds ever arrive. Only the clubmen can kill any birds; indeed, but for their havens of duck rest there would be no water fowl stopping over in Los Angeles county for anybody to shoot at. Given the proper accommodations, five days of undisturbed quiet a week, plenty of fresh, sweet water and a little grain, almost anyone can secure web-footed tenants at a reasonable rental of fifty birds a week. But the quail cannot be rounded up. They levy a modest toll on the farmer's and ranchers' grain, or the vineyardist's grapes, and like civilization reasonably well—at a distance. He who would have a quail preserve must buy a few mountains and valleys; several square miles of virgin land where the little wanderers can satisfy their nomadic desires without straying on the lands of another. Needless to say, not many can afford such an extensive sporting proposition, especially as they can secure no better sport than any poor ranch hand by so doing. The valley quail is a native son of the Golden West, and only asks a fair field and no further favor than reasonable protection from the murderous machine guns that are too rapidly taking the place of the good old double barrel in the hands of "up-to-date" sportsmen. Only two things avail in the pursuit of these gamest of all game. One must be more or less of an athlete to cope successfully with them on their native hills, and he must be a good shot. Quail are by no means as difficult to knock down as many have painted them, but they are quite fast enough on the wing, and tricky enough on the ground to give display to both the art of finding birds alive and picking them up dead after a clean kill.

Valley quail fill every requirement of the sportsman. To suit these finical gentry a bird must first be difficult to secure; hard to hit on the wing, and hard to find unless killed outright. Second, he must be worth something on the table when obtained. Third, he should be a thing of beauty; an ornament to the bag. The quail is preeminently all three.

Men who have chased them up a steep hill only to hear their tantalizing "quit-t-t, quit-t-t," as they leisurely take wing and sail down the other side, and have taken the bird's sweet advice as they sat on the hilltop and softly swore at the retreating dots of whizzing blue will agree the quail is hard to get a shot at in the first place.

Those who by dint of hard work have finally rounded a band up in a cañon's side and have missed shot after shot as they scrambled up its precipitous side, slipping back two feet out of every three, panting like a winded hound bellows the while, will certify to two other allegations; that it takes an athlete to hunt them on their home hills, and a good shot to bag them as well. Few birds can in the space of one short morning present such an array of shots. One rises and leisurely sails straight away, while another whirls around to the right like a bullet, going just a little faster than a man can swing the gun. A third shoots straight up the side of a cañon and ten to one is undershot by the startled marksman. Most men are in too much of a hurry shooting quail. The birds are not getting out of range nearly as fast as their hustle and bustle leads one to believe.

As for the third claim in the quail case, any epicure can give eminent testimony on the bird's gastronomic qualifications.

This year a generally-observed fact, and one that has given much satisfaction to sportsmen in general, is the splendid prospect for sport that exists within easy distance of the city. In half a dozen different directions the limit seems easily probable within an hour's drive of Second and Spring streets. Game Warden W. B. Morgan, whose business takes him around the country as much as any, and who has been doing efficient work in protecting the birds this summer, reports encountering immense bands of quail in the vicinity of Burbank, mostly this season's birds. On the northern side of the San Fernando Valley from Pacoima Cañon to Monte Vista and that vicinity, there are as many today as there ever were. The Verdugo hills are full of them as well. On the southern side of the valley out the Calabasas road even to that bloody burg there is the material for many weeks of good sport.

The Santa Monica Mountains and the entire Malibu ranch are well stocked with quail, according to returning deer hunters. Most of the buck fraternity are as adept with the scatter gun as with the rifle, and many have located their fall quail shooting right where they dropped the season's deer.

Joe Mitchell, the "Laird of Glen Ivy," was in town last week renewing acquaintances, and he states there are as many birds on his Riverside place as ever. A party of local sportsmen expect to open the season at Mitchell's. Last year the place afforded splendid sport, and Mr. Mitchell has seen to it himself that they were not alone this summer.

In the country which centers in Newhall there are about the usual number of quail, perhaps a little more. The best ground in that vicinity is Castaic Cañon, where there is a number of bench lands that afford easy hunting and plenty of shots. There is no need of going so far for the limit early in the season, though many will wander up that way, as some of the nearer resorts are shot out.

Redondo and San Pedro sportsmen have learned that there are several bands of the blue birds in the Palos Verdes Hills, so will not have to go far from home for their sport.

East of Los Angeles along the foothills of the Sierra Madre Mountains there are numbers of quail everywhere. Sportsmen of the Kite-track crowd are preparing for some great sport later on.

Farther south in, the Hacienda country there are always plenty of quail. This year has been no exception, though the birds have been disturbed a great deal by "nooners" and shotguns. Some men cannot wait for the season to open. Indeed, this is true of Los Angeles county as well as its neighbors. Last week George Ralphs, a well-known local sportsman, declared he had seen men shooting quail in the San Fernando Valley no longer ago than the Sunday preceding. Ralphs believes the game has been quite general. Game Warden Morgan says he has heard from time to time of illegal shooting in the valley, and has done his best to stop it. There always has been more or less of this sort of thing around Los Angeles and probably there always will, but it would have a salutary effect if an example was made of some of the poachers.

VERNON PARK

Consisting of about 70 acres, 300 resident lots. This property was located over a quarter of a century ago by the early builders of Los Angeles—most of whom have passed away—and it fell into the hands of different owners. It has become too valuable for the raising of fruits and vegetables, and has been placed in our hands for subdivision. We propose to sell it. Our terms, the location, improvements, and 25-year-old trees, are a guarantee that every lot will sell and will double in value inside of a year. There are many trees in Vernon Park that if you owned them you would not take the price of a lot for them. Why go miles out and pay $1000 to $2000 for a lot without a single tree, when you can buy one of these choice lots for from $290 to $600, with all modern improvements. Don't invest anywhere until you visit this tract—it will cost you nothing—and compare it with all others. Take the Vernon cars to 45th St. and Central Ave. to our branch office—agent there to show property at all times.

Today we trumpet our final call,

"HOUSE AN

FACT AND COMMENT.

THERE has been apparent of late somewhat of a tendency to ask prices for property that tend to discourage investment. This is especially true of inside business property, also of acreage property in and adjoining the southern part of the city, where big improvements are now under way. The high prices asked for business property have had the effect of practically putting an end to investment, for the time being, on the three business thoroughfares. Of course, a person has a perfect right to set any value that he pleases on his real estate, or other possessions, but property owners who ask more than a reasonable price should remember that they are simply helping owners of property in adjacent sections, by driving investors elsewhere. If exorbitant prices are asked for property on Spring street and Broadway, it will simply have the effect of turning the attention of investors more rapidly to Main street, and Hill street, and other actual and prospective business thoroughfares. The same is true in regard to prices of acreage south of the city. As soon as a certain figure is asked, then investors will begin to look southeast, or southwest, or west, or to some other point of the compass, for there is still a large amount of vacant acreage suitable for subdivision within half an hour's ride of Los Angeles by electric car.

Seaside Resorts.

While it is true that a good many improvements have been made at the seaside resorts of Southern California during the past few years, there still remains very much to be done before we can fairly make a comparison between these places and the seaside resorts of Europe. It must be admitted that these places of ours are still quite crude. There is altogether too much dust, and dirt, and untidiness in many places.

A Church a Nuisance?

May a church edifice be properly regarded as a nuisance, like an oil refinery, a gas works, or anything of that kind? This seems a strange inquiry, but it is suggested by the fact that citizens living in an aristocratic part of the southwest recently subscribed $4500 to induce a Catholic church that was about to be built to "move on" into another neighborhood.

CONTRACTORS AND COUNCIL.

A TEST CASE TO BE MADE.

The question of the responsibility of contractors, who undertake contracts for public improvements, such as the grading of streets, is certainly a most important one to every property owner. Those Los Angeles property owners who have about come to the conclusion that they have no rights whatever that contractors are bound to respect, when it does not suit them to do so. Also, many of them have about arrived at the conclusion that anything a contractor may want from a City Council he is very likely to receive, irrespective of the prayers or protests of the interested property owners. It has become a common thing—and a crying evil—for contractors to take contracts for important improvements when they know full well that it is utterly impossible for them to complete the work within the time prescribed in their contract, feeling assured that when the time is up they will experience no difficulty whatever in securing a renewal from an amiable Council. This evil has grown to such an extent that some of the property owners have made up their minds to put a stop to it, if it can be done, or, failing in that, at least to put on record those members of the City Council who estimate the interests of contractors above the rights of the people, in order that the tax-paying voters may keep the names of such gentlemen in those little memorandum books which every gentleman carries for such purposes, and help them to sit down and stay at home, should ever again run for public office. A flagrant instance of this kind will be brought before the Council tomorrow in the shape of a petition from the Sunset Boulevard Improvement Association, which held a largely-attended meeting on Friday evening, at which the following resolutions were unanimously adopted. They will be presented to the Council at 2 p.m. Tuesday:

Whereas, Charles Stansbury, on the 3d day of February, 1903, entered into a contract with the city of Los Angeles to grade and curb Sunset boulevard from Douglas street to Mailman avenue for a certain price per foot, aggregating over $100,000, and at the same time appointing a committee from this association, if awarded said contract, to complete said improvements within twelve months from the 3d day of March, 1903, in his written contract said Stansbury being allowed twelve months to complete said work, instead of six months, and bonds being furnished by him for the faithful performance of said contract; and whereas, though six months of the said twelve months have passed, said Stansbury has not done 15 per cent. of said improvements, which rate several years will be required before said work is completed; said Stansbury in the meantime having entered into several other contracts with said city, to grade streets elsewhere, and upon these his bidding outfits are now at work, to the neglect of his prior obligations to prosecute with due diligence the said improvement of Sunset boulevard, said Stansbury relying, no doubt, on obtaining from this Council and its successors such extensions of time as he may ask, and so be allowed to complete said work at his leisure; now therefore, be it

Resolved, That the City Council be respectfully requested to notify said Charles Stansbury of the complaint herein set forth, and to advise him that while there is yet time to complete said work within the contract time of twelve months, that he prosecute said improvement of Sunset boulevard with due diligence and not rely on extension of time to complete the same after said twelve months shall have expired, and that no extension of time be granted; and be it further

Resolved, That the bondsmen, Herman Zaber, E. S. Shattuck, J. Jepsen, B. Hughes and F. R. Strong, on the bond given by said Stansbury for the faithful performance of said contract, be notified by this association of the complaint herein contained, and more especially that all the lands in the assessment district to be taxed for said improvements will be greatly damaged by the growth of that section of the city retarded, if said Charles Stansbury shall fail to complete said im-

"HOUSE AND LOT"—The Times' Weekly Review of Real Estate and Building.

FACT AND COMMENT.

There has been apparent of late somewhat of a tendency to ask prices for property that tend to discourage investment. This is especially true of suburban business property, also of acreage property in and adjoining the western part of the city, where big improvements are now under way. The high prices asked for business property have had the effect of practically putting an end to investment, for the time being, on the three business thoroughfares. Of course, a person has a perfect right to set any value that he places on his real estate, or other possessions, but property owners who ask more than a reasonable price should remember that they are simply helping owners of property in adjacent sections, by driving investors elsewhere. If exorbitant prices are asked for property on Spring street and Broadway, it will simply have the effect of turning the attention of investors more rapidly to Main street, and Hill street, and other actual and prospective business thoroughfares. The same is true in regard to prices of acreage south of the city. As soon as a certain figure is asked, then investors will begin to look southeast, or southwest, or west, or to some other point of the compass, for there is still a large amount of vacant land suitable for subdivision within an hour's ride of Los Angeles by motor car.

Resorts.

While it is true that a good many improvements have been made at the seaside resorts of Southern California during the past few years, there still remains very much to be done before we can fairly make a comparison between these places and the seaside resorts of Europe. It must be admitted that the places of ours are still quite crude. There is altogether too much sand and dirt, and untidiness in many places.

Church a Nuisance?

Is a church edifice be properly regarded as a nuisance, like an oil refinery, a gas works, or anything of that kind? This seems a strange inquiry, but it is suggested by the fact that citizens living in an aristocratic part of the southwest recently subscribed $4500 to induce a Catholic church that was about to be built to "move on" into another neighborhood.

CONTRACTORS AND COUNCIL.

A TEST CASE TO BE MADE.

The question of the responsibility of contractors, who undertake contracts for public improvements, such as the opening of streets, is certainly a most important one to every property owner. Los Angeles property owners have come to the conclusion that they have no rights whatever that contractors are bound to respect, when it comes to suit them to do so. Also, many of them have about arrived at the conclusion that anything a contractor may want from a City Council is very likely to receive, irrespective of the prayers or protests of the interested property owners. It has become a common thing—and a crying shame—for contractors to take contracts for important improvements when they very well know full well that it is utterly impossible for them to complete the work within the time prescribed in their contracts, feeling assured that when the time is up they will experience no difficulty whatever in securing a renewal from an amiable Council. This evil has grown to such an extent that some of the property owners have made up their minds to put a stop to it, if it can be done, or, failing in that, at least to get on record those members of the City Council who estimate the interests of contractors above the rights of the people, in order that the tax-payers may keep the names of such men in those little memorandum books which every gentleman carries for such purposes, and help them to put down and stay at home, should they ever again run for public office. A flagrant instance of this kind will be brought before the Council tomorrow in the shape of a petition from the Sunset Boulevard Improvement Association, which held a largely-attended meeting on Friday evening, at which the following resolutions were unanimously adopted. They will be presented to the Council at 2 p.m. Tuesday:

"That Charles Stansbury, on the 28th day of February, 1903, entered into a contract with the city of Los Angeles to grade and curb Sunset boulevard from Douglas street to Maltman avenue, at a certain price per foot, aggregating over $100,000, and at the same time entering a committee from this association, if awarded said contract, to make said improvements within the time from the 3d day of March, 1903, as by the written contract said Stansbury was allowed twelve months to do said work, instead of six months, as bonds being furnished by him for the faithful performance of said contract; and whereas, though six months of the said twelve months have expired, said Stansbury has not done more than 5 per cent. of said improvements, and at this rate several years will be required before said work is completed; and whereas said Stansbury in the meantime has entered into several other contracts with said city, to grade streets elsewhere, and upon these his grading outfits are now at work, to the detriment of his prior obligations to prosecute with due diligence the said improvement of Sunset boulevard, said property relying, no doubt, on obtaining from this Council and its successors such extensions of time as he might ask, and so be allowed to complete said work at his leisure; now therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the City Council be and is hereby requested to notify said Charles Stansbury of the complaint hereinbefore set forth, and to advise him that there is yet time to complete said work within the contract time of twenty months, that he prosecute said improvement of Sunset boulevard with due diligence and not rely on extensions of time to complete the same after said twelve months shall have expired, and that no extension of time will be granted; and be it further

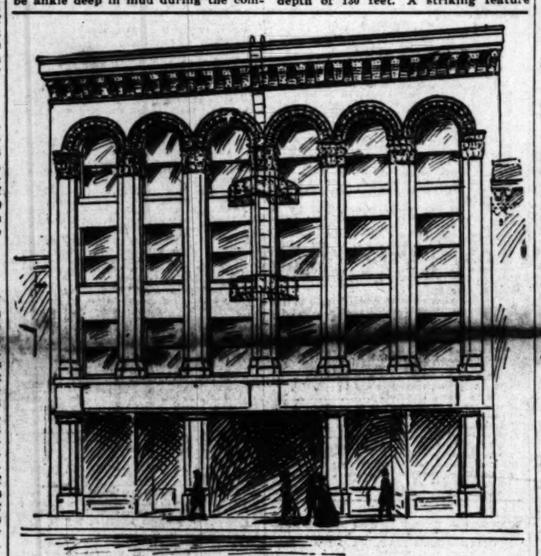
"Resolved, That the bondsmen, Herman Zuber, E. S. Shattuck, J. Jepsen, J. B. Hughes and F. R. Strong, on the bonds given by said Stansbury for the faithful performance of said contract, be notified by this association of the conditions therein contained, and more particularly that all the lands in the assessment district to be taxed for said improvements will be greatly damaged by the growth of that section of the city, and that, if said Charles Stansbury shall fail to complete said improvement within the twelve months named in the contract and in pursuance of said bond.

"That the president of this association appoint a committee of three to present copies of the foregoing to the City Council, Charles Stansbury, and to Herman Zuber, E. S. Shattuck, J. Jepsen, J. B. Hughes and F. R. Strong, bondsmen, one to each."

The resolutions are signed:

Sunset Boulevard Improvement Association, by I. B. Bolton, president; T. W. Kane, secretary.

It is more than ten years since the property owners on these northwestern hills—naturally one of the choicest residence sections of the city—subscribed several thousand dollars, which was deposited with the Council, for the purpose of widening Sunset Boulevard to a width of 100 feet, the idea being that it would be graded, forming a much-needed thoroughfare, there being no graded street in that part of the city. After patient and persistent work for ten years, the point was arrived at where the Council, in February last, let a contract—said to be the largest of the kind ever let by the city—for an amount exceeding $100,000, to Charles Stansbury. For several months Mr. Stansbury made no pretense whatever of commencing work, until the property owners began to complain vigorously, and a protest was published in The Times. Then he set about half a dozen scrapers to work on this big job, and has been dribbling along at this rate ever since, nothing adequate having yet been done on the big cuts, which constitute the heaviest part of the job. The portion of the boulevard that has been graded is ankle deep in dust, and will probably be ankle deep in mud during the coming winter. Meantime, a number of residences that had been planned for erection along the boulevard are held back awaiting its completion.



THE BROADWAY COMPANY'S BUILDING.

At the meeting on Friday evening Mr. Skilling, the Councilman from the Second Ward, was present. From a reply given by him to a question, it is apparently his idea that the bondsmen of a contractor cannot be proceeded against in such a case as this, and that the Council has a perfect right to indefinitely extend time on such contracts, according to their own will and pleasure, and entirely oblivious of written agreements, or the rights of the property owners. If such is the case—which is scarcely credible—then such contracts are evidently a useless farce, and not worth the paper they are written on. Why, then, go through the formality of requiring bondsmen for contractors? However, the property owners interested in this improvement are not willing to believe that any such absurd condition of affairs prevails. They propose to make this a test case, and are prepared to subscribe money to take the matter through the courts—and up to the highest court if necessary. Nor will they be alone in this matter, for many outside property owners of wealth, who have undergone similar experiences, under which they are still indignantly smarting, will be found ready to assist them financially in testing the rights of property owners in such cases.

There are, of course, cases in which contractors who try faithfully to carry out their contracts find themselves prevented from doing so by circumstances beyond their control. When, however, a contractor deliberately takes a big job like this, promising to complete it within six months, when he knows full well that it would be impossible for him to complete it within twice that period, and when he further, on top of this, accepts several other contracts, then, indeed, the time has arrived when patience ceases to be a virtue and becomes cowardice.

It is now "up to" the Council to at least make some expression on this subject. It can no longer be ignored.

BUSINESS AND EXPANSION.

BROADWAY BELOW FIFTH.

Elsewhere on this page are shown sketches of new business buildings that are approaching completion, on the west side of Broadway between Fifth and Sixth streets. They are all brick structures, fairly illustrative of the substantial character of the business improvements now going up on the southern portions of the business streets.

Broadway below Fourth street is just now taking the lead, perhaps, in the movement of business blocks toward the south, but it is by no means monopolizing this movement, and while no other business street below Fourth can, at this time, make a showing of four new business buildings nearing completion in a single block, they are all doing something in the way of preparation for an extension of the business section of the city.

THE BILICKE BUILDING.

Of the buildings shown in the sketches, that on the right is the five-story business block being erected for A. C. Bilicke. It stands on a lot, 108x150 feet to an alley, on the west side of Broadway, 60 feet south of Fifth street. The building, which has a front of cream-colored pressed brick, covers the entire frontage and extends back to a depth of 120 feet. A space of 30 feet is thus left between the back part of the building and the west line of the lot. The plans are from the office of Architects Morgan & Walls, and the building is being put up under their supervision. It is to be finished, and ready for occupancy by the 1st of next month, and it will cost about $60,000.

MEYER AND ROWAN BLOCKS.

In another sketch are shown the two blocks that are being put up for Alexander Meyer and R. A. Rowan, respectively. The Meyer Block stands on a lot 25x150 feet, on the west side of Broadway, about midway between Fifth and Sixth streets. It is a four-story structure, with front of plate glass and buff-colored pressed brick, that covers the frontage, and has a depth of 130 feet. A vacant space of twenty feet is thus left at the back of the building. The plans of this building were prepared by Architect Edward Neisser, and he is supervising its erection. It will be ready for occupancy within the next few weeks, will be provided with elevators and similar modern features, and will cost something over $20,000.

Just south of the building last described stands the R. A. Rowan Block on a lot 25x150 feet, to an alley. It is a five-story structure, which also covers the frontage, and extends back to a depth of 130 feet. A striking feature of this tall and narrow block is its handsome finish. It has a front of plate glass and Indiana gray stone, with dark brick headers at the corners, arranged in such a way as to form a handsome ornamental trimming. A freight and passenger elevator, with other modern conveniences, and interior decorations, in keeping with the exterior, completes the equipment of the building. It was built from plans of John Parkinson, and under the supervision of that architect, is now nearing completion. When finished it will cost about $40,000.

As showing the stiffening of values which accompanies substantial improvements and an increasing appreciation of the present and future commercial importance of this city, it may be stated that these two lots, whose joint frontage is only 48 feet, were bought about a year ago, by the present owners, fo rthe consideration then named of $1750 per front foot. Today the ground alone is easily worth $2500 per front foot.

BROADWAY COMPANY'S BLOCK.

Another business building that will be completed in this locality in about thirty days, is a four-story brick that is being put up for the Broadway Company, of which R. A. Rowan is president and F. S. Rowan is secretary and treasurer. It stands upon a lot 62½x150 feet to an alley, on the west side of Broadway, 160 feet north of Sixth street, and it covers the frontage and extends back 130 feet. Its exterior finish will be of buff-colored cement, and it will be provided with freight and passenger elevators, and modern conveniences in the form of sanitary plumbing and suitable arrangements for light and ventilation. It was designed by Architect John Parkinson, is being erected under his supervision, and, when finished, will cost about $55,000. The ground upon which it stands is held by the company named under a lease from the owner, Mrs. Eliza Goodwin. It is one of those well-located business lots whose owners, while not caring to discuss values or to invite tempting offers, simply do not care to sell.

A Rejected Favor.

They boarded an open trolley car. Silks, feathers and flowers decked the girl, while the young man smoothed his new pepper-and-salt trousers with pride.

They had eyes and ears for each other alone, and when the girl received a sharp rap on the shoulder from behind she uttered a little shriek. Eyes flashing, her young man turned to see a rough, red-faced fellow offering a dainty bouquet tied with a knot of blue ribbon.

"Do not notice him at all," the young man said, with great presence of mind, and looked away.

Another rap upon the shoulder, and she whispered: "Harry, I think I'll say, 'No thank you,' to him. He's intoxicated as anything and may get violent if I ignore him."

Harry turned and shook his head at the man when the flowers were thrust forward again. Then they were flung in the young lady's lap.

"Oh, Harry!" she cried, "I'll faint. Hold me! Oh, gracious me, I knew she didn't sew them on tight. It's the bunch off the right side of my hat."

"Stop the car!" roared the excited Harry, and they left amid the unconcealed giggles of their fellow passengers.—[New York Times.

AMONG REAL ESTATE OWNERS AND DEALERS.

MORE BUOYANT FEELING NOTED IN THE MARKET.

Purchases of Business Properties That Are Soon to Receive Substantial Brick Buildings as Improvements Are Among Deals of the Past Week.

The market begins to warm up as the fall season becomes a present, existing fact. The sales noted on the first day of September included some good prospective business property, which is to be improved in such a manner as to insure an income upon the investment, some valuable acreage that will, doubtless, be improved at an early date, and the usual number of residence properties. A high tax rate on a high valuation is not likely to stimulate investment and development, because property owners can bear just about so great a burden and no more, but the factors that make for the advancement of this municipality are strong enough to overcome this, and some other drawbacks that could be named. Brisk buying and extensive development may safely be expected in spite of these obstacles. The importance of conservatism in everything pertaining to real estate transactions is evident now, and the necessity for scanning propositions relative to new and outside tracts closely is fully as pressing as formerly. Investors in beach lots are seemingly quite eager to buy, but beach properties, as a rule, are not risky. The general outlook is, undoubtedly, excellent.

Main Below Fifth.

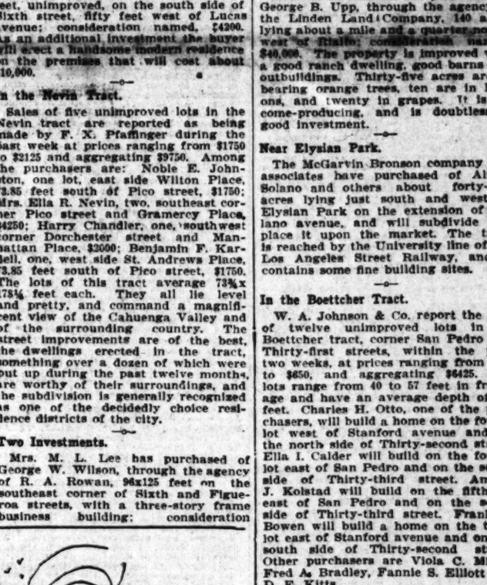
One of the sales noted in the early part of the week that will have a stimulating effect on development in the locality named is that from Mrs. M. L. Lee to Edward L. Doheny, through the agency of R. A. Rowan, of such substantial improvements as west side of main street, about midway between Fifth and Sixth streets, with a frame dwelling of small value compared with the frontage; consideration, $50,000. This is at the rate of $1000 per front foot. It is reported that the buyer intends erecting a four-story brick business building on the property at an early date. With the present growing demand for business property, such a building, in this locality, should rent for a sum sufficient to pay a good interest on the investment. The deed to this property was placed on record last Thursday, and the consideration was incorporated therein.

Tenth and Sunbury.

A purchase of residence property, noted in The Times in the latter part of the week, that is indicative of the tendency of capital to seek medium priced dwellings as investments, is that whereby a lot, 100x150 feet to an alley, on the northwest corner of Tenth and Sunbury streets, with two eight-room frame dwellings fronting on Tenth, and a seven-room frame dwelling on Sunbury street, was bought by James Cummings from Albert H. Kells and Mrs. Alma Erkes, through Mines & Farish; consideration named, $15,400. A bargain at the price quoted.

Will All Improve.

George D. Howland has purchased from Harriet Harvey, through the agency of W. I. Hollingsworth & Co., an unimproved lot, 100x165 feet to an alley on the east side of Flower street, between Twelfth and Pico streets; consideration named, $7500. Owner will improve with modern flats. Mrs. Thomas Molyneaux has purchased of C. J. McDewitt, through same agents, a lot, 46x120 feet, on the north side of Eighth street, between Flower and Hope streets, unimproved; consideration named, $4800. Owner will improve with a three-story frame apartment house. Hulda Behrendt has purchased from Joseph Burkhard, through the firm named, a lot, 50x165 feet, on the west side of Flower street, between Sixteenth and Eighteenth streets, unimproved; consideration named, $3100.



THE BILICKE BLOCK.

Buyer will build a residence on the premises.

Will Subdivide.

Jennie B. Walrath has purchased of Henry Timmerman, through the agency of Schenck, Tatum & Schenck, seventeen unimproved lots averaging from about 50x150 feet each, located on the north and south sides of Fifty-third street, between Compton and Central avenues, with a six-room cottage, No. 1340; consideration named, $6000. The purchaser owns other lands in this locality which, with those acquired by this purchase, will be subdivided.

Will Build.

T. T. Bradshaw has sold to W. L. Truitt, through Althouse Bros., 100x169 feet, unimproved, on the south side of Sixth street, fifty feet west of Lucas avenue; consideration named, $4300. As an additional investment the buyer will erect a handsome modern residence on the premises that will cost about $10,000.

In the Nevin Tract.

Sales of five unimproved lots in the Nevin tract are reported as being made by F. X. Pfaffinger during the past week at prices ranging from $1750 to $2125 and aggregating $9750. Among the purchasers are: Noble E. Johnston, one lot, east side Wilton Place, 73.85 feet south of Pico street, $1750; Mrs. Ella N. Nevin, two, southeast corner Pico street and Gramercy Place, $4250; Harry Chandler, one, southwest corner Dorchester street and Manhattan Place, $2000; Benjamin F. Kardell, one, west side St. Andrews Place, 73.85 feet south of Pico street, $1750. The lots of this tract average 73¾x178¼ feet each. They all lie level and pretty, and command a magnificent view of the Cahuenga Valley and of the surrounding country. The street improvements are of the best, the dwellings erected in the tract, something over a dozen of which were put up during the past twelve months, are worthy of their surroundings, and the subdivision is generally recognized as one of the decidedly choice residence districts of the city.

Two Investments.

Mrs. M. L. Lee has purchased of George W. Wilson, through the agency of R. A. Rowan, 96x125 feet on the southeast corner of Sixth and Figueroa streets, with a three-story frame business building; consideration named, $32,500. Less than three months ago Mr. Wilson bought this property; consideration then named, $27,500.

The grantee named has purchased of George W. Stimson, through the same agency, a lot on the southwest corner of Sixth and Flower streets, fronting 50 feet on the former and 125 feet on the latter. The south 25 feet of the Flower-street frontage has a depth of 100 feet, thus giving the lot an ell shape. It is improved with a frame cottage and a two-story frame apartment building, containing three six-room flats; consideration named, $25,000. These are both income-producing properties.

Near Rialto.

Mrs. M. A. Kimball has purchased of George B. Upp, through the agency of the Linden Land Company, 140 acres lying about a mile and a quarter northwest of Rialto; consideration named, $40,000. The property is improved with a good ranch dwelling, good barns and outbuildings. Thirty-five acres are in bearing orange trees, ten are in lemons, and twenty in grapes. It is income-producing, and is doubtless a good investment.

Near Elysian Park.

The McGarvin Bronson company and associates have purchased of Alfred Solano and others about forty-five acres lying just south and west of Elysian Park on the extension of Solano avenue, and will subdivide and place it upon the market. The tract is reached by the University line of the Los Angeles Street Railway, and it contains some fine building sites.

In the Boettcher Tract.

W. A. Johnson & Co. report the sale of twelve unimproved lots in the Boettcher tract, corner San Pedro and Thirty-first streets, within the past two weeks, at prices ranging from $575 to $650, and aggregating $6425. The lots range from 40 to 57 feet in frontage and have an average depth of 140 feet. Charles H. Otto, one of the purchasers, will build a home on the fourth lot west of Stanford avenue and on the north side of Thirty-second street. Ella I. Calder will build on the fourth lot east of San Pedro and on the south side of Thirty-third street. Amalie J. Kolstad will build on the fifth lot east of San Pedro and on the south side of Thirty-third street. Frank S. Bowen will build a home on the third lot east of Stanford avenue and on the south side of Thirty-second street. Other purchasers are Viola C. Miller, Fred A. Bradley, Fannie S. Elliott and D. E. Kitts.

Nadeau Park Tract.

M. S. Hellman, as trustee for local investors, purchased in the latter part of the week, from Charles E. French the forty-acre tract known as Nadeau Park lying on the southeast corner of Colby and Fortuna streets in the southeastern portion of the city; consideration named, $26,500. Extensive improvements are said to be intended by the new owners. The demand for property of all kind suitable for subdivision or for improvement as acreage is becoming quite active.

Improvements Contemplated.

Mrs. I. N. Van Nuys, who purchased of Milton Metzler, last week, through Wright & Callender, 62x155 feet, unimproved, on the west side of Figueroa, 100 feet south of Eighth street, consideration named, $9000, is said to intend erecting upon the premises, at some time in the near future, a substantial brick building that will cost between $15,000 and $20,000.

Sites for Homes.

The following small sales of unimproved lots, reported by Lang & Co., which are all to be improved, are among the signs that are indicative of growth and development. Mrs. A. M. Carey to Catherine F. Schillinger, 50x150 feet, south side Fifteenth street, between Magnolia and Pacific avenues, $1175, and buyer will build two-story frame dwelling; Harold Lacey, to Jacob Baringer, 50x124 feet, west side of Arapahoe, 200 feet south of Pico street, $1500, and buyer will improve with a $3000 dwelling; Mattie J. Norton to J. T. Harvey, who will build a substantial residence, 47x146 feet east side Millard avenue, about 300 feet south of Pico street, $1600; Jacob A. Hasemeier to A. J. Norton, who will build home on property, 47x146 feet, east side Millard avenue, about 250 feet south of Pico, $1600.

New Water Reservoir.

A purchase which was referred to some weeks ago was closed during the past few days, by which the Board of Water Commissioners of the city of Los Angeles acquires of Alfred Solano two and three-quarter acres on the south side of Effey street, about 1000 feet west of Solano avenue, unimproved; consideration named, $2000.

THE K. & B. PIANO

In the Kranich & Bach every piece of material is selected and every detail is designed and manufactured for one grade only—the highest.

The experience gained during forty years in the making of over 39,000 pianos has been applied to the development of the details of manufacture, so that the Kranich & Bach has resulted in a finished instrument; one that contains a flexible and responsive action, resulting in a delightful touch; a tone with that mellow, singing quality so much sought by artists; beauty in case construction and finish and a durability of the whole, which, as the years roll by insures the permanence of rich melody in a manner that may be likened to a fine old violin.

These points of merit are entirely due to the musical knowledge and mechanical genius of the makers; a knowledge and genius directed to the manufacture of a single quality of instrument—the best.

KANSAS FLOOD

Good news. The prettiest rattan rockers that ever graced a home go on sale Tuesday at one-half and one-third less than regular. The two cars containing these were caught in the submerged portion of Kansas City. The rockers aren't injured, but some of them show slight water-stains and have lost their brilliant gloss. Some you'd never suspect were touched by the flood. We'll both profit by it. The factory stands the loss. We've added our regular profit and our patrons will secure the most artistic, newest styles at bargain prices that are invincible. Reduced prices $2.00 up.

Big rockers, little rockers, fancy or plain. Best rattan quality and best make. On sale Tuesday.

Hatch, Superintendent of the Commission in Lunacy; W. S. Melick, Secretary of the Board of Examiners, and the Board of Managers of the hospital, comprising Maj. J. W. A. Off of Los Angeles; John McGonigle, Ventura; E. P. Clarke, H. T. Hayes, Riverside; H. B. Wilson, Redlands, and John Morton, secretary.

Just what form the investigation will assume is a matter of conjecture, in view of the attitude of those making the charge of general mismanagement and inhuman treatment of patients. Some are not willing to appear at the investigation, but as the State Commissioners hold the power of subpoena, enforced attendance can be resorted to. Others are eager to be present and give their testimony, but will insist upon their expenses being defrayed by the State. In the absence of a fund for this purpose, there may be but one alternative—the commissioners will be obliged to go to the witnesses, they being able to draw for their personal expenses.

THE ACCUSERS.

That inhuman methods of punishment have been resorted to is alleged by numerous ex-employés, who claim that their long silence is due to their belief that an attempt at an expose would only result in a whitewash. Mrs. Ida B. Varney and Mrs. Elisabeth Huston of Santa Monica have been very definite in their charges, going into the horrible details of the suffering of patients under examination and by the use of apomorphia in disciplining the unruly.

Fred E. Howard, in the employ of the Dean Drug Company, formerly pharmacist at the hospital, claims to be able to corroborate a portion of the statements made by Mrs. Varney and Mrs. Huston. That he might have evidence in confirmation of the allegations he now makes, Howard carried off the hospital records at the time of his dismissal, a portion of which have been recovered by Dr. Campbell.

C. N. Whitaker claims to be able to demonstrate that general mismanagement prevails under Dr. Campbell's administration, and that the upper office is given to "grafting." In support of this latter allegation Whitaker offers in evidence requisitions No. 2579½ and 2585, showing the workings of the "law of substitution." The requisitions named are for small sums, but the principle involved is that if the upper office can substitute in small amounts there is no possible check in transactions involving larger amounts.

By those in authority it is claimed that in substituting there is nothing lost to the State; but the average taxpayer is interested in knowing why, if the supplies purchased were legitimate, it was necessary to resort to substitution.

Whitaker also claims that by a comparison of reports there will be found an increase of $1000 in the value of farm products for the period ending June 30, 1903, over the previous period. The ex-steward also expects to prove that had there been a full return for the sale of the orange crop there would have been a further increase of another thousand dollars.

Another persistent accuser is R. C. Harbison of San Bernardino. Harbison will be present at the investigation without urging. Harbison is particularly interested in looking into the manner in which the estates of insane wards have been probated. In a cursory examination of the San Bernardino county records Harbison claims to have found discrepancies covering a period of years. He further claims that goodly portions of numerous estates have passed into the hands of others by a system of "graft" made possible by collusion of the secretary's office and a favored attorney.

WITNESSES SUMMONED.

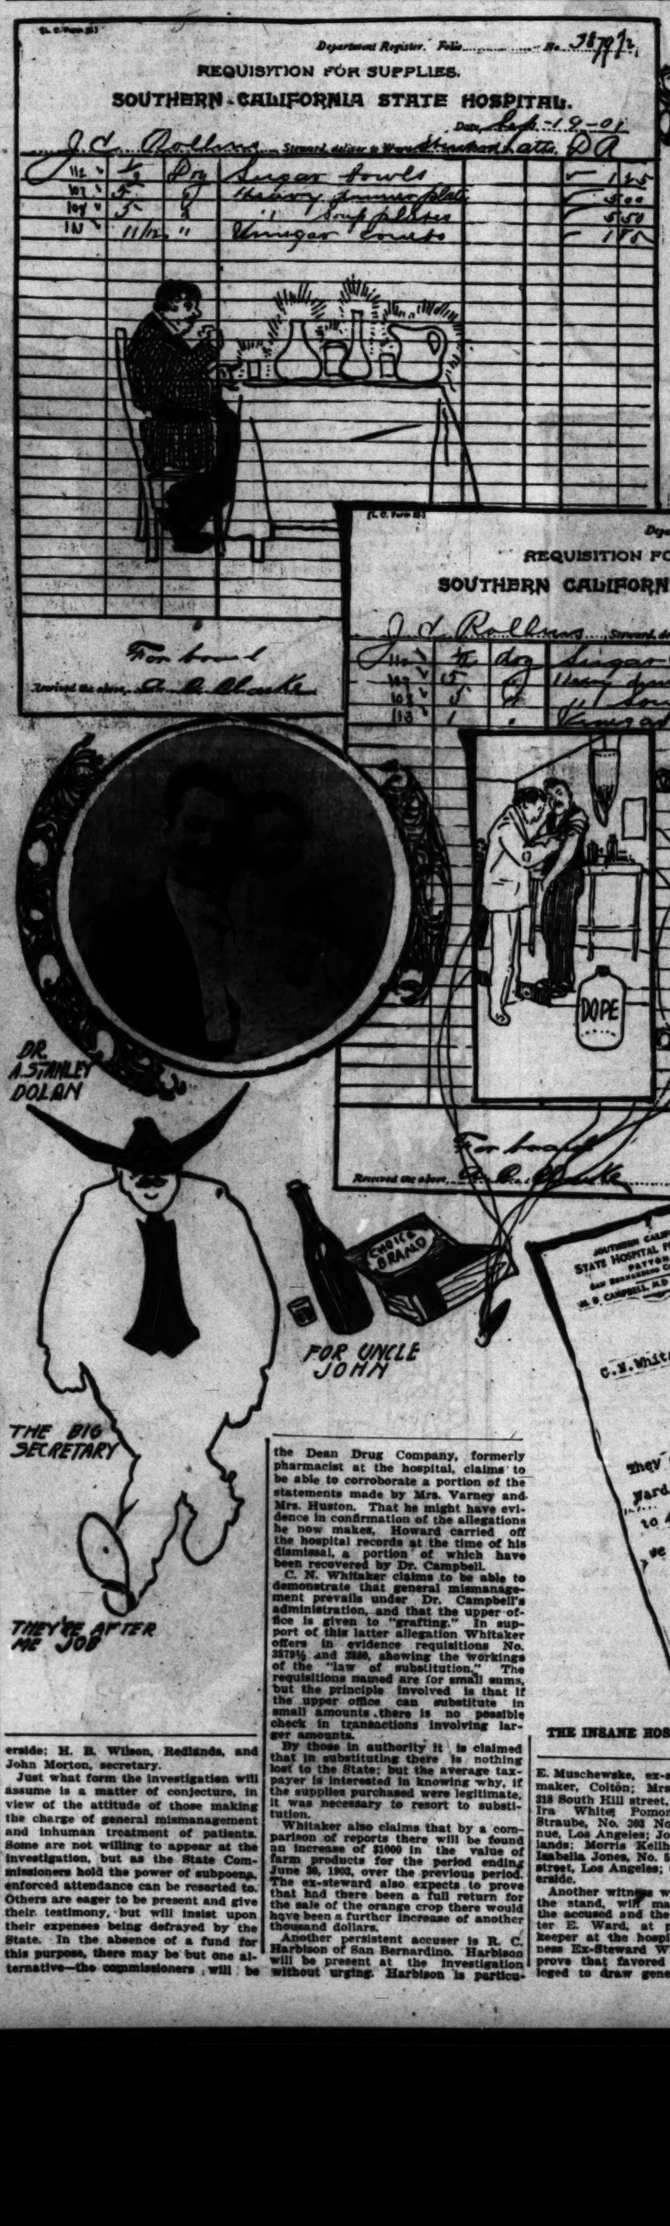
Other witnesses who have stories to tell are E. L. Watkins, ex-steward's clerk, Alhambra; John Cardiff, San Bernardino; J. Howard Smith, ex-assistant steward, Colton; C. J. Oberschmidt, a former patient, Highgrove; E. Muschewske, ex-attendant and shoemaker, Colton; Mrs. Dr. Olcutt, No. 218 South Hill street, Los Angeles; Mrs. Ira Whitet Pomona; Benjamin C. Straube, No. 308 North Fremont avenue, Los Angeles; John Campbell, Redlands; Morris Kellher, Pomona; Mrs. Isabella Jones, No. 526 North St. Louis street, Los Angeles; C. O. Morrell, Riverside.

Another witness who, if placed upon the stand, will make fun for both the accused and the accusers in Walter E. Ward, at present the storekeeper at the hospital. By this witness Ex-Steward Whitaker expects to prove that favored ones were previleged to draw generously upon the State supplies, that the estimate for "real" covered the purchase of all kinds of luxuries for officials, and that for years "grafting" has been the rule rather than the exception. By this same witness, Dr. Campbell expects to prove that Whitaker worked the "law of substitution" to a limit, that it could not be worked at all without the steward's officer standing in; that the ex-steward himself supplied "Uncle John," and the other majors with their regular "bottle of Old Taylor and a box of cigars," and that while watching others was indulging in like practices to those alleged to be true of others.

CLARKE WILL FIGHT.

A. C. Clarke, "the big secretary," is fully prepared for the fight of his life. He has engaged the services of Gen. F. C. Prescott of Redlands to conduct his case before the commissioners, and purposes putting the blame where it belongs.

"A San Bernardino political gang is after my job," said Secretary Clarke yesterday. "I am in the minority here and I suppose some people think I have held the position long enough. But my office will speak for itself. Nothing would please me more than to turn a few experts loose among my books and papers. This investigation is but the beginning of trouble. Things will begin to pop on the outside after it is concluded.



THE INSANE HOSPITAL AT HIGHLAND, ITS OFFICERS AND FEATURES OF THE INVESTIGATION.

Germany Rivals Ireland.

Today Germany fairly rivals Ireland with its potato crop and outdoes most other countries. Fully an eighth of the arable land of the empire is planted to this nutritious vegetable. Half the large yield is used directly as human food; a considerable other portion is given over to fattening stock. There still remains an enormous surplus after that, however, and it is the success with which the Germans have met in turning this surplus into manufactured products that is most remarkable.

Among these manufactured products are starch, glucose, potato flour, dextrin and starch sugar, each of which appears prominently on the list of German exports, all together contributing very large sums every year to the profits of German manufacturers and exporters. But the alcohol which the Germans make from the potato is the most valuable and wonderful product of all. This as a light producer fairly rivals the electric current, it is said.

The apparatus for its practical use includes lamps, chandeliers, street and corner lights, in which alcohol vapor is burned like gas in a hooded flame, covered by a Welsbach mantle. So used, potato alcohol is described as burning with an incandescent flame equaling the electric light in brilliancy. Indeed, we are officially told now by our Consul-General at Berlin that potato alcohol is competing with gas and electricity with increasing success every year.

In the problems of heat and power production, too, the lowly potato has been brought into use, and the alcohol from it has been applied to warming and cooking stoves, to steam locomotives, to thrashing, grinding, fuel cutting and other agricultural and mechanical appliances. The advantages said to be found in its use for immediate readiness for operation; dispensing with coal, water and firemen; freedom from odors and danger of fire, and greater economy of maintenance. Possibly there is some exaggeration in these claims. But figures given plainly show that the potato as cultivated in Germany, has produced a real competitor for at least benzine and petroleum for motor purposes.—[Providence Journal.

The Royal Dessert Service.

The famous Sèvres dessert service, which is kept in cabinets in the green drawing-room at Windsor, and in which President Loubet was most interested, is probably worth about £30,000. The service was purchased by George IV., when Prince of Wales, for quite a small sum. It was passed on his death in accordance with his will to William IV., who generously made it over to the Crown instead of keeping it as his own private property, which he could have done, if so disposed.—[Tit-Bits.

The Jew nose, with a hook, was found in but 6 per cent. of 3000 Hebrews observed by Dr. Fishberg, medical examiner for the United Hebrew Societies. Straight noses constituted 65 per cent., bread noses 13 per cent. and retrouse noses 14 per cent.

The Drama—Plays, Players and Playhouses. Music and Musicians. Musical New

AT THE THEATERS.

Grand Opera-house.

WALTER SANFORD'S PLAYERS will present for their first week's offering at the Grand Opera-house (the converted Orpheum, on Main street,) the Drury Lane play, "Sporting Life." It was written by Cecil Raleigh and Seymour Hicks, and is said to possess all the elements of excitement, all the heart-throbs, all the loves and hates indigenous to plays of its character, in addition to some entirely novel methods of stirring the human emotions. It is given in four acts and ten scenes, there being a number of effective stage pictures.

The first act shows the ancestral home of the Earl of Woodstock; act second takes the auditor to the illuminated grounds of the Earl's Court exhibition at London, while the next scene shows Hotel Cecil; act four is a view of Covent Garden, and the interior of the National Sporting Club of London; the last act is laid at Epsom Downs on Derby Day.

The company, headed by William Desmond and Miss Ethel Earle, is said to be specially adapted to plays of this character. The engagement opens with a matinee this afternoon.

Burbank.

James Neill and the Neill company offer for the coming week at the Burbank Theater, "The Cowboy and the Lady," written by Clyde Fitch for Nat Goodwin.

The scenes of the play are laid in Colorado and the action has to do with the love affairs of one "Teddy," a graduate of Harvard, class of '94, and a young man of worth, and a Mrs. Weston, wife an unprincipled scoundrel. The four important incidents marking the action of the comedy are the cocktail party, a dance in the town hall, the murder of Weston by a half-breed named Quick-Foot Jim, the subsequent arrest of Teddy as the murderer and a courtroom scene, in which his innocence is proven.

The only matinee will be given Saturday.

Orpheum.

For its opening week at the new house on Spring street the Orpheum management has endeavored to prepare a bill of especial attractiveness. Edwin Keough and Dorothy Ballard are players who have forsaken the legitimate for a season to present in vaudeville a sketch entitled "A Vaudeville Surprise." It is said to be very clever.

The Fleury Trio, novelty dancers, are on the bill as well as Sam Edwards, the comedian, formerly with the Frohman forces. Edwards and two associates will present something called "A Pair for Two."

Emile Seidel, transformation dancer, billed for last week, will be here sure this time, so they say. Larkins and Patterson are a musical colored team new to Los Angeles.

Held-overs will be Healey and Meeley, acrobats; John La Clair, juggler, and Lew Hawkins, monologuist.

Chutes Park.

The leading attraction at Chutes Park today will be a double balloon ascension, given by Miss Edna Springer and Farrar Sandusky. Miss Springer was a pupil of Baron, the Georgia aeronaut, who was killed at Atlanta with his wife while making a double ascension in the identical manner that will be tried today.

Will Reis will coast the entire length of the Chutes on a bicycle, and Michael Bolaski, Syrian lion tamer, will perform with his animals.

The Imperial band will render promenade concerts afternoon and evening, and a vaudeville programme of all new numbers has been put on in the theater. The zoo has been largely increased of late.

Mrs. Fiske's Season.

One of the attractions of the year in this city is Mrs. Minnie Maddern Fiske, who will be seen here in her great production, "Mary of Magdala." Mrs. Fiske's season will begin September 14 at the Manhattan Theater, New York. She will stay there four weeks, and will then undertake the longest tour she has ever made.

She will be supported, it is said, by a strong organization, and as she herself is noted for better second appearances than first in a production, it seems probable that her work will this year gain an added subtlety and force.

Mrs. Fiske is still a long way from us, as she will not be in this city until April, 1904.

Baker Theater Company.

The Baker Theater Company, a stock organization never before seen in Los Angeles, follows the Neill Company at the Burbank, appearing there September 20. The Baker company is said to be one of the best stock companies in the West, and to have some clever people.

Los Angeles already knows one of its members, William Bernard, who has been "loaned" to the Neill company. Mr. Bernard has made an excellent impression in Los Angeles, and if he is a fair sample of the Baker company that aggregation will be welcomed heartily by the Burbank patrons.

The selection of plays has been happy, to say the least. Too many managers make the mistake of thinking, or affecting to think, that the public demands at "popular" prices nothing but two-penny melodrama, with a little cheap comedy thrown in.

Baker's list includes "The Liars," in which John Drew made a pronounced success in New York; "The White Horse Tavern," "Miss Hobbs," "Christopher, Jr." "The Prisoner of Zenda" and others.

Now we shall see.

McVicars in Prince.

The Neill-Morosco Company has produced "Mrs. Dane's Defense" in San Francisco, and as in this city, it made a distinct hit. The Call gives a column lead to its criticism of this play, and speaks in the highest terms of the production as a whole. Frank McVicars gets the best of it, and here is what the Call says about his work and that of the rest of the aggregation:

"To Frank MacVicars's Sir Daniel Carteret, much of the triumph of the evening was due. His acting, his portraiture of the kindly justice, became so convincing, so sympathetic, so masterly, that he amazed even those who have before acknowledged him to be an actor of rare attainment.

"From first until last he was equitable, and his arraignment of the false, his condemnation of the hypocrite and the sycophant when pouring out truths from his vial of philosophy to the lovable Lady Eastney, delightfully played by Miss Adora Andrews, was intensely powerful.

"Miss Lillian Kemble gave an excellent interpretation of Mrs. Dane. Her simulations were capital and her deceiving tewers were strong enough to gain the sympathy of the audience as they were sufficiently human to hoodwink Justice Sir Daniel Carteret, of course, until such time as he let loose his legal experience in forcing the truth.

"'Mrs. Dane's Defense' is splendidly mounted. It is one of the strong attractions of the week."

Neill's Baby.

The treasurer at the Burbank Theater caused a rather strenuous afternoon for James Neill and his company the other day, although he was not in the least to blame. A wee telegram made all the sow. A messenger boy rushed into the box office—although "rushed" may seem paradoxical—and handed the lucre keeper the missive with the admonition to see that Neill got it right away.

James Neill was not in the city at the time; in fact, he was as far away as Santa Monica, and Eyton thought that the best thing under the circumstances would be to give the message to Edythe Chapman (Mrs. Neill.) As she read it surprise, dismay and even anger were depicted on her face. She didn't say a word, but by the time she had got to the point of expressing herself nearly the whole company had gathered around to find out what was the matter. Rehearsal was stopped and everything was at a standstill.

Mrs. Neill was angry; Eyton was stumped. Just then James Neill himself came in, and it looked as if there was to be a real domestic tragedy enacted then and there. She didn't have the heart to hand the gram to her husband, so the lady concerned gave it to Eyton. And when Eyton saw it he nearly exploded with laughter.

Here's what it said: "James Neill, Los Angeles. Sent shoes for your boy Frankie this morning. (Signed) Ganter & Matern Company, San Francisco."

Mrs. Neill laughed, too, when it was explained. Then Charley Eyton and James Neill went up to Hazard's Pavilion together, looking for the right James Neill, father of Frankie Neill, the little San Francisco pugilist.

The shoes in question were not dainty kid boots for the tootsies of a wee infant, but the fighting footwear for the ring of the featherweight boxer.

The New Orpheum.

Completely remodeled and newly furnished, painted and decorated, with new draperies and curtains, the old Los Angeles Theater, now the new Orpheum, is hardly recognizable.

Great changes have been wrought. When the workmen finished tearing down the old house little was left but a shell. So the theater is new, and in fact a new house. The eight boxes on the main floor have been replaced by twelve new boxes and two loges. The boxes are supported on ornamental columns, and hung with rich draperies. The fronts are designed in relief of Spanish renaissance style. They are so situated that a full view of the stage from any other seat in the house is unobstructed.

The old balcony and gallery were entirely removed, and have been replaced by new ones intended to give better results in the matter of seeing and hearing. The seating capacity has at the same time been increased. The stage has been remodeled also, and additional lighting facilities have been put in. New, sanitary and well-lighted dressing-rooms, a long-needed feature, have also been added.

A new feature of the seating is the row of mezzanine boxes placed in the front part of the balcony. New seats have been put in the entire building. The main floor now seats 542, with 48 additional in the boxes. The balcony seats 353, with 32 in the boxes. The gallery seats 550, giving the house a total seating capacity of 1601.

Another thing which should add to the comfort of patrons is the new system of ventilation. Fresh air is brought in through the upper conduits, and with a system of fans and the false floor the impure air is being constantly removed, though slowly and without draught.

Of course the entire building has been repainted and decorated, and the work is very artistic. The entrance from Spring street is finished in old oak, with ceiling and walls decorated in keeping with the other work. The ticket and managerial offices on the north side have been so arranged that no space is taken from the lobby, thus giving its full width as an exit. A new exit has been opened on the south side of the auditorium, from the ground floor, and there are new exits and stairs from the gallery.

The work has been under the supervision of J. H. Hill for John Parkinson the architect.

The house will be opened tomorrow night.

ACTORS AND PLAYS.

Surprise is often expressed that favorite actors do not extend their repertoires and produce new plays with more frequency, which is not strange if we stop to consider that the production of a new play means a risk to the reputation of the man making it as well as a big expense, which in the case of the play's failure means a serious loss to his bank account.

Some people are so Utopian in their ideas as to imagine that the actor who makes money with one or two pieces should forthwith proceed to invest it in some play for no other reason than that the public would like to see him in a new character, but what would be to the advantage of the public might be most disastrous to the actor; for if failure attended the production, and he lost heavily by it, it is dollars to Swiss cheese that the public would say: "Served him right; why didn't he stick to his old repertoire?"

Unthinking people used to complain that Edwin Booth never made a production of a new play, but why should he? The tragedies of Shakespeare, Shiel, Bulwer and Massinger afforded him almost unlimited opportunities for the display of his genius, and even if he were willing to give the public new plays, where was the poet capable of writing anything even approximately as good as the dramas he was accustomed to appear in? His genius vivified and illumined all the great parts he played, and it would have been folly in him to turn to melodrama while the theater goers of the country willingly accepted him in the classical plays.

Lawrence Barrett, fine actor that he was, made a good many productions of an ambitious order and deserved all the encomiums showered upon him for his enterprise in so doing, but does any sane man think that he would have done so had he been as successful as Mr. Booth in the standard tragedies, and had he not been compelled to do what was not at all needful to the great tragedians who were his contemporaries as well as those who had preceded him? When an actor is really great in Shakespeare the public is satisfied to accept him for all time, and it is only when mediocrity assumes to be great that novelty is demanded, and then pageantry, upholstery, gewgaws and tinsel take the place of true histrionic genius.

Another great actor who has not found it necessary to extend his repertoire is Joseph Jefferson. For nearly forty years he has been delighting audiences with his marvelous performance of Rip Van Winkle, and today it is as fresh and human as when he first produced it. This can only be ascribed to Mr. Jefferson's wonderful art. By it he preserves all the youthful aroma of his early performances, and where an ordinary actor would become monotonous, unimpressive and overelaborate, he continues to win and hold the admiration and affection of new generations simply because he is the great actor he is. When he is gone, who can play Dr. Pangloss, Bob Acres, Golightly and Caleb Plummer as he does? It is in the fashion to call these pieces antiquated and tie-wiggy, but they were not written to order for any particular actor, and when an inferior person takes them up and falls in them, likely as not he consoles himself by saying "there's no fat in them, and the public wants something more up to date."

John E. Owens, while starring, did not have to make many additions to his private collection of mirth-provokers. His Joshua Butterby in "The Victims," his Wellington de Boots in "The Widow Hunt," his Solon Shingle, his Toodles, his Live Indian, his Pangloss and Caleb Plummer were such masterpieces of effective but unexaggerated comic acting that even to remember them is a pleasure to the theater-goer of today. He didn't have to talk the slang of the poolroom and the bucket shop to evoke laughter, and when tears were called for they were easily drawn forth by this admired and admirable comedian.

Denman Thompson has no need to make a new production while people continue to enjoy his performance of "Old Whitcomb." No matter what the play, Mr. Thompson is still dear old Uncle Josh, and while children laugh and country folk wallow in peanuts, the New Hampshire farmer will continue to please and render it unnecessary for Mr. Thompson to deplete his bank account by getting anything newer.—[Dramatic News.

QUIPS AND CUES.

De Wolf Hopper began his second tour in "Mr. Pickwick" at Saratoga on September 3. The company, which numbers nearly seventy persons, includes many of the players who appeared in the original production of the musical comedy.

Anna Held and Florenz Ziegfeld, Jr., arrived from Europe on August 13, on the Kaiser Wilhelm II. Mr. Ziegfeld announces that he will bring to America the Spanish actress Rosarito Guerrera, and that he is negotiating with Jean and Edouard de Reszke for an operatic tour.

Mrs. Langtry will begin her New York season at the Savoy Theater on September 5, when she will present a new play, entitled "Mrs. Dearing's Divorce." The play is by Percy Fendall, and deals in a clever and bright manner with smart society folks of London. Mrs. Langtry will be supported by Paul Arthur, as her leading man, and her own company from the Imperial Theater. Mrs. Langtry promises the most elaborate display of gowns she has ever worn on the stage. She will bring to America two complete sets of gowns that have been made for her by Paquin and Doucet.

Percy Williams arrived from Europe last week, carrying contracts for several big European acts which will appear during the season at his Orpheum and Circle theaters. The acts were booked by Mr. Williams in conjunction with M. Meyerfeld of the Orpheum circuit. The contracts made by Mr. Williams call for transportation for the performers to and from Europe and all fares on this side. This arrangement proved very acceptable to the performers, as so many of them have been fooled in the past on account of their ignorance of the geography of the United States, finding out when it was too late that their large salaries shrank to nothing when the big railroad fares had been deducted. Mr. Williams has been very busy since his arrival, preparing for the opening of his season.

Charles Frohman, when he returned from Europe a few weeks ago, had the rights of fifty-three plays in his grip-sack, and he is only one of the many enterprising promoters who have playwrights under contract. There will be an increase in the number of new plays this year over last, and likewise the number of old favorites to be produced will be in the majority. There are nine new theaters in New York, and there must be more plays. The writers have not labored with enough industry to fill the gap, and, it is evident then, that the needed plays had to be found in the files of other days. In all the hurry of preparation this one fact stands out above all others. The season is to be a novel-play year.

Stephen Phillips is different from some other poets in relation to his method of work and environment. To some the poetic muse can only be evoked in subdued lights and surrounded by ancient furniture. But these things do not influence Mr. Phillips. He wrote "Herod" while on a visit to a friend. In fact, he can work anywhere and at any time. Directly an idea comes to him he jots it down on a piece of paper. Any scrap of paper will do; he has even been known to tear the edge from a newspaper and write on that. Directly this is done he crams it into his waistcoat pocket. This somewhat careless habit of transferring ideas to paper, then to waistcoat pocket, has not always brought out the best results.

News comes from Germany that Herr Hermann Sudermann has just completed a new play, of which the title might be freely translated into English as "Socrates and His Companion in Arms." In the play, which is described as most original both in idea and treatment, Socrates is simply a term used to describe a society of ideal-ists and dreamers, and his companion is a sympathetic dentist, who has been banished from his own country on account of his extremely radical ideas. The play deals to a large extent with the difference that exists between Socialism of the highest class and the base and mercenary substitute which so often parades in its name. The whole performance is essentially German, the last scene being devoted to a fete commemorative of the battle of Kadan.

For the purpose of rounding out the dedication of the new Greek amphitheater, the gift of William R. Hearst, three famous Greek plays are soon to be given by the students of the University of California at Berkeley. The initial production is to be represented at 4 o'clock on the afternoon of September 22, immediately following the dedicatory speeches, which will begin at 3 o'clock. The play to be given is entitled "Birds," and was written by Aristophanes. The special translation for this occasion was made by Prof. Isaac Flagg of the university. The cast will consist of an orchestra of thirty-two pieces and a singing chorus of forty members. The leading parts in the play will be taken by W. H. Alexander, who graduated with the class of 1900; B. H. Cerf, '02; W. Brown, '01; B. S. Allen, '04, and H. R. Dewing, '03.

THE LYRIC OPERA QUARTETTE.

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS.

AN ORGANIZATION of well-known local singers now contemplates an operatic concert tour, stimulated by the success of the costume concert of Mme. Mantelli, Eugene Cowles and others, and they are already booking for engagements all over the southern part of the State. This little organization calls itself "The Lyric Quartette," and is composed of Mrs. Eisenmeyer as soprano, Mrs. Starborough as contralto, Mr. Davies as baritone, and Mr. Zinck as tenor. Miss Ildicah Eisenmeyer as accompanist.

Two of the members at least have already had practical stage training, Johan Haag Zinck having been a former leading tenor with the Royal Opera of Copenhagen, and Mr. Davies was for some time with Henry Savage's Castle Square Opera company.

The repertoire includes scenes from the second act of Weber's "Der Freischutz;" the prologue to Leoncavallo's "I Pagliacci;" the third act of Verdi's "Il Trovatore, and the first act of the ever-popular "Carmen."

The "Carmen" number will be the most ambitious attempted by the group of singers, and the scene will be cast with Mrs. Starborough as Carmen, Miss Eisenmeyer as Micaela, Mr. Zinck as Don José and Mr. Davies in the dual roles of Escamillo and Dancairo.

The tour of the quartette will begin early and will be quite extensive.

Choir that Sticks.

Here's an interesting musical item so far as is known, there is only one of the leading church choirs of the city that has not changed its personnel during the past twelve months. This choir is that of the First Christian Church, under the direction of Joseph P. Dupuy.

Some of the organizations have "busted" with uproar several times during the year, and there have been scandals in some cases. Other choir members have moved away or gone abroad for study; still others have sought and obtained better positions, and some found fortunes in the rush that the "moving" spirit has been generally felt all around.

The choir in question is composed of Miss Ethel Fults, soprano; Miss Harriett Longstreet, contralto; J. J. Martin, baritone, and J. P. Dupuy, leader and director. Miss Fults has just been chosen soprano soloist for the Hellenean quartet's fourteenth season, and Miss M. B. Orcutt will be the pianist of the quartet.

Angelus Success.

The Angelus Opera Company, which scored a success at the Ocean View Country Club some time ago, has been booked by L. Behymer for a series of business throughout the State. The repertoire of the company includes three evenings of opera and two concert evenings. The personnel of the organization is the same, under the direction of F. Waller Seager, baritone. They are to play a return date at the Country Club soon.

Mr. Seager has been chosen as soloist of the German Saengerfest, which is given September 20.

Miss Joy's Engagement.

Miss Beresford Joy has been engaged as contralto soloist at the First Presbyterian Church. She will begin her work October 1. An excellent quartette is now insured, with Mr. Bowman baritone and director, Mrs. Dolan soprano and Mr. Zinck as tenor. Mrs. Sloan will substitute for Miss Joy during September.

Treble Clef Club.

The Treble Clef Club has resumed rehearsals, and will meet every Thursday afternoon in Chickering Hall, 332 South Broadway.

The club will give three concerts the coming year, and already has a large associate membership. Especial interest is maintained in the selection of new members, only good voices being received.

How About It?

Land of promise and plenty though is this great American country, the artists of Europe who make the United States their Mecca. But notwithstanding the golden opportunities more than one of the managers who undertake the role of exploitation. From a practical standpoint the advent of the diva Adelina Patti seems about the limit of extravagance. For the remnants of a once marvelous voice, the assumed airs and graces of an ingenue, a few worn-out arias from an opera or two (Patti never had even an ordinarily good repertoire) and the inevitable "Home, Sweet Home," a speculative manager has the consummate assurance to demand five dollars a ticket. There can be sentimental reasons for such a bearing, but there can be no excuse for nothing gained intellectually or financially.

THE SILVER STATE.

Recollections and Reflections of Thomas Fitch.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

A VERDURELESS, treeless, arid plain, stretching away westward from the eastern slope of the pine-covered Sierras, with a few streams flowing in cascades and rapids from the mountains, and coursing through a few narrow green valleys ere they lose themselves in the sage brush desert—such was the Silver State in 1865, when Horace Greeley said: "Nevada ought to be good for silver, for it is good for anything else." And the pioneers replied:

What though Nevada's hills be sere, Her deserts drear, her tempests cold, Her brow is silver trassed, her veins are gold."

Scores of thousands of the brightest, the truest, most generous, enterprising and energetic men on earth, the Knight Paladins, who challenged the brute forces of nature to combat, the settlers who, possessed with the aura of their fames, faced the storm and the savage, the desert and disease, swarmed around the base of Mount Davidson, and reached out to Aurora, to Reese River, and to the mountains of the Humboldt. Crawling like huge flies over the bald skulls of lofty mountains, plodding across alkaline deserts, while pulsed with deluding mirages under the throbbing light, and smiting with pick and hammer at the adamant doors of the earth's treasure chamber, these pioneers engaged in their self-imposed task.

Reader with rifle or revolver than with scriptural quotations was the Nevadan of those days, and reader still with his coin says at the call of distress. Under the blue shirt might be found sometimes a graduate of Yale, and sometimes a fugitive from Texas. A man assumed to be better than his word, but thoroughly enjoyable when he is to be found. ously from an evening with Patti. The present day fairly educated musician is infinitely in advance of Patti's generation, trills, roulades and cadenzas have no place with him and contemporary operatic artists are inferior of a higher type than those of forty or forty years ago. Nothing but curiosity to see the owner of a famous name can account for even a passing interest in Patti. Patti is a nice old lady, and has undoubtedly still a few of the good things of life, but she surely has saved enough from her many days to render unnecessary this farewell tour, which from all accounts is a sadly feeble artistic exposition, and is likely to prove financially disastrous to the exploiters of the tour. What would it be if in the days of the prima donna's zenith of fame and power she should find an unresponsive public. But what can be expected? It is a company of comparatively unknown people, who possibly are fairly well equipped for provincial towns, the most flamboyant paper of the world to turn-storm the country. Oh, the degradation of our much-vaunted art.—[Musical Leader.

New York's Summer Music.

New York is getting ahead of Paris as a place of amusement. More than that, it is becoming the great summer resort of the world where the usual dog-days interim is not known. Climatic conditions have favored the change within the last two seasons, in that with the summers which we have had a few years ago, and now there are coming into town during July and August as plentifully and enthusiastically as though it were a month at Carlo.

The restaurants of our hotels give evidence of this mid-season popularity. Some restaurants allure, and good orchestras make music for us all summer through. Little garden restaurants abound through the city, and all of them have their clientele of sensible, well-to-do homes who have learned the delights of picturesque New York and the abundance of its summer markets. THE SILVER STATE.

Reflections and Recollections of Thomas Fitch.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

A VERDURELESS, treeless, arid plain, stretching away westward from the eastern slope of the pine-crowned Sierras, with a few streams rushing in cascades and rapids from the mountains, and coursing through their narrow green valleys ere they lose themselves in the sage brush desert—such was the Silver State in 1860, when Horace Greeley said, "Nevada ought to be good for silver, for it is no good for anything else." And the miners replied:

"Though Nevada's hills be sere,
Her deserts drear, her tempests cold,
Still to her mountain breast
The precious ore is pressed,
Her river is silver tressed, her veins

Then thousands of the brightest, bravest, most generous, enterprising and energetic men on earth, the knight Paladins, who challenged the fierce forces of nature to combat, the men who, possessed with the aura mens fimeri, faced the storm and the tempest, the desert and disease, hovered around the base of Mount Davidson, and reached out to Aurora, to Nevada, to Reese River, and to the mountains of the Humboldt. Crawling like huge flies over the bald skulls of lofty mountains, pleading across alkaline deserts, often reeled with deluding mirages under the throbbing light, and smiting with pick and hammer at the adamantine doors of the earth's treasure chambers, these pioneers engaged in their self-imposed task.

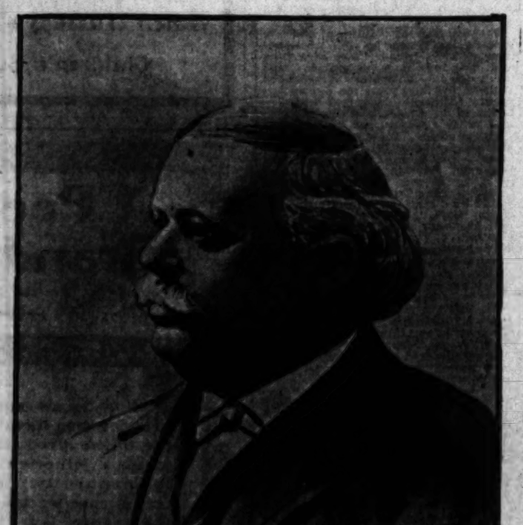
Rather with rifle or revolver than with scriptural quotations was the Nevada of those days, and reader still can hear the coin sack at the call of distress. Under the blue shirt might be found sometimes a graduate of Yale, and sometimes a fugitive from Texas, but all seemed to be better than his neighbor, and no man conceded his inferiority to anybody. Freiburg graduates and sheep herders, divinity students and Cornish miners, farmers' sons and ex-Judges of the Supreme Court were all treasure-seekers together, and a blow of a pick might unmake fortunes, and equalize paupers and the princes of this world's cave. Some found fortunes and some found unmarked graves upon the hillsides, and many have become great or renowned in other fields, but all among them all will remember no other than affection the days away back in the sixties" when he wrought and toiled and spun the woof of rainbows in the Sage-brush State.

Those days only in the upper levels of Comstock were yielding their wealth, the great Bonanza was undiscovered, the California and Consolidated Virginia exhibited nothing but barren quartz and hope, and those who had a hand or a hand day controlling the financial and political destinies of Nevada were working as laborers in the mines, or were scintillating, or practicing as members of the bar as brilliant a bar as could be found in any community of thrice its size in all the land.

LIEUTENANT W. H. STEWART.

Perhaps there a Berseker in all the land who loved to fight for the fight's sake, for the very joy of combat, more than United States Senator William M. Stewart. Glorious, incomparable, indomitable, undismayed, tireless Bill." Though fortune forsook him, though death snatch from his side the nearest, though the favored of fortune intrigue for his togs, though the years of age has changed his tawny mane and beard to silver, his steel-blue eyes have not lost their glitter, nor his step its sweetness, and he springs to the front in the tournament of Senatorial debate as vigorous and alert as when he engaged in the contests of the court-room forty years ago.

And it was a field of battle in which the warriors were intellectual athletes—Chief Justice Charley Bryan, who escaped from desert sandstorms and Apache arrows, and at last chokeal to death on a beefsteak in a Carson restaurant; Thomas H. Williams, who was forced to take a portion of the California mine for a fee, and held it because he could not sell it, and was made a millionaire in spite of himself; Frank Hereford, afterward Congressman and Senator from West Virginia; Mesick, and Hillyer, and Baldwin, and DeLong, and Perley, and last, but not least, Charles H. S. Williams, who once said to me: "I am going back to California. I have practiced law in Virginia City for a year. I have taken in over forty thousand dollars in cash fees, and I have never tried a case in which I was not forced to know that either by my client or by the client of my opponent, the Judge, or the jury, or both, had been bribed." He returned to San Francisco, failed to recover his lost practice there, and, too proud to be second where he had once been first, in a fit of despondency blew out his brains.



HON. THOMAS FITCH.

Gen. Williams did not much overestimate the situation, for the voters of Nevada who had previously voted almost unanimously to reject a constitution of State government, believing themselves unable to sustain one, a few months later voted with equal unanimity to adopt one, and whatever reason for this change was given to the public, the real reason was a desire to get rid of the judges of the Territorial courts. As was wittily said by a Delegate in the Constitutional Convention when the report of the Committee on State Seal was read: "Instead of 'Volems et Potens,' the motto of Nevada ought to be 'Nolens Volens.' It was this same Delegate who insisted that in consequence of the need of legislation it would be well to provide "that for the first two years the Legislature shall hold its biennial sessions annually."

The public opinion of that day concerning the judicial tribunals of Nevada Territory was inadvertently but aptly expressed by a newly-appointed bailiff of the Territorial Supreme Court. He was a long, lean gentleman of great gravity and dignity of demeanor, with a sonorous voice, a most imposing manner, and an exalted idea of the importance of his office. It was his duty at the beginning of the term to announce to the assembled bar of the Territory that its highest judicial tribunal was open for business. No particular formula had been prescribed for such announcement, and it had not occurred to "Baron Pumpernickel," as the bailiff was nicknamed, that it would be all sufficient to say to the lawyers and litigants in waiting: "Gentlemen, the Supreme Court." So, swelling with his importance, the baron stretched forth his arm: "Oyez, oyez, oyez," he cried, "the Honorable the Supreme Court of the Territory of Nevada is now in session—God help the people of the Territory of Nevada."

TOM COX, THE LAWYER.

Among the lesser lights of the bar of that day was Tom Cox. He was somewhat too bibulous and too scattering to achieve a leading practice in Virginia City, but in the neighboring district, of which Washoe City was the county seat, he was facile princeps.

He was a North Carolinian, a college graduate, a student first of divinity, later of medicine, and lastly of law. He was a typical "forty niner," for he had been a miner, a lumberman and a teamster, as well as a doctor, a preacher and a lawyer. He was an all-around sport and as fond of fun as a boy. He was adroit and eloquent at the bar or on the hustings, and it was his boast that he could with equal facility draw a complicated bill in equity without an erasure or an interlineation, and that with a dragoon revolver he could shoot the head off a chicken at twenty paces. He was as free to borrow your money when you had any as he was to loan you his own—when he had any—and he never drew a solvent breath from Monday morning to Saturday night. He occupied a dilapidated one-story wooden building in Washoe City, where he established his law office in the front room, while in the rear apartments he located his living rooms, where he did his own cooking and lived sometimes alone and sometimes with a companion who ameliorated the acerbities of his bachelor life.

A NEVADA CLASSIC.

The speech of Tom Cox on the action of Negus against the Ophir Company is a Nevada classic. "Gentlemen of the jury," said he, "this case has been on the calendar of the court for four years, and for one reason and another its trial has been postponed many times, at the instance first of the plaintiff, and then of the defendant. The attorneys who brought the suit against the Ophir Company have retired from the scene of human action, one of them peaceably and the other forcibly, and I have taken their place, while the original attorneys for defendant now wear the toga and the ermine. Many changes have taken place since Negus was driven from his wood ranch by the defendants. When this action was instituted the Ophir Company was the incorporate 'High yu mucs-a-muck' of the sage brush. Its stock sold for $4000 a foot—it paid monthly dividends on each foot of $150. It had a brick house at its reduction works, which were surrounded by a high fence to exclude the gaze of the vulgar. It built a bridge across that muddy pond which, when it has any water in it, is called 'Lake' Washoe, so that when the trustees came down every Saturday for their wine dinner they were not obliged to go around the alleged lake to get there. After their wine dinners the trustees occupied the night, and sometimes the entire Sabbath, in playing the great American game with blue chips and a ceiling limit. The Ophir had a United States Senator and a United States District Judge for its attorneys, and its stockholders walked along snuffing the stars. Now, gentlemen of the jury, how have the mighty fallen! Ophir stock has dropped from $4000 to $100 per share. The dividends have ceased. The decayed and untraveled bridge across the diminished lake has become useful chiefly as a shelter for young wild ducks while their pin feathers are growing. The high fence has fallen so low that the lowliest woodpacking jackass of the ridge can straddle it; the pop of champagne corks is heard no more in the dismantled brick house, and when the dejected trustees occasionally assemble there they use beans for chips, with 1 cent ante, and 10 cents limit, and each director squealing for a sight all the time. The great Ophir Company has struck hot water and desert sand in its mine, and come down to Whitman and Fitch for lawyers."

THE POLITICAL ARENA.

There was much activity in the political arena in Nevada, as elsewhere, in the late sixties, and in the absence of theaters and concerts the crowds who attended upon the hustings were large, and appreciative of a good point whomever it might hit. When the fourteenth amendment was under discussion, a candidate for Congress was expatiating upon the dire results to flow from its adoption. "Under it," said he, "if Nevada refuses to admit Chinamen to vote, her representation in Congress will be reduced." "Nevada has but one member of Congress," retorted his opponent, "and I do not see how we can reduce her representation unless we elect you."

There was a great meeting at Austin called to listen to a joint debate between the Congressional candidates. One of these was a young man with heavy head of brick-auburn hair, which he parted in the middle, and a well-developed bump of self-esteem. Austin was in the eastern portion of Nevada, 160 miles from the western section, with a desert wilderness between. "My opponent," said one of the speakers, "has been called the young Samson of his party, and I admit the aptness of the comparison. Like Samson, he has a heavy head of hair in which his strength mainly lies, and which he parts in the middle to avoid disturbing the equilibrium of his intellect. He has come across the desert which divides Austin from Virginia City in order to enlighten the Philistines upon constitutional law. Like Somson, he has come up out of the wilderness hoping to prevail against us, and with the same weapon that was used by his predecessor"—the speaker did not say what the weapon was, but the audience caught on.

INCIDENTALLY.

"Mr. Smith," said Judge Caleb Burbank, "you have been convicted of the crime of murder in the second degree, and for some reason not apparent to the court, the jury have recommended you to its mercy. Your crime was dastardly. While your victim was seated, you came behind him, and without any apparent provocation you stabbed him in the back. You are a man over 50 years of age, and it is in the power of this court to sentence you to imprisonment for the remainder of your natural life. But the jury which convicted you have seen fit to recommend you to mercy, and as this court does not feel at liberty to entirely disregard the recommendation of the jury, it will comply with it to the extent of not giving you a life sentence. The sentence of this court is that you be confined at hard labor in the Nevada Penitentiary for fifty years."

"From what you know of yourself," said Charley Bryan to a smooth tongued witness who had given damaging testimony against him, "from what you know of yourself and of your reputation for truth and veracity in this community, would you believe yourself under oath in a matter where you were personally interested?" The reply is not chronicled.

"Judge G.," said his partner, "you have violated our partnership agreement and this law firm must be dissolved at once. It was distinctly agreed between us that we were to take turns impartially in getting drunk—week and week about. You have now been drunk for two days in my week. You have failed to control your inordinate appetite for liquor; you have usurped my privilege, you have deprived me of my bargained rights and we break up right here and now."

Col. Calhoun Thompson, aspirant for Sheriff in an outlying county, perused with indignation an article which appeared in the Carson Appeal reflecting on the character, career, and characteristics of all members of the colonel's party, and especially upon those who supported the colonel for office. Determined to vindicate or avenge his friends, the colonel armed himself with a huge hickory cane, a bowie-knife and a pair of derringers, and mounting his horse he rode into Carson. Having hitched his horse and quenched his thirst at the Howling Wilderness Saloon, the colonel strode over to the newspaper office. It was the noon hour, and all the appeal force had departed save an undersized, bearded, fragile looking young man, who was seated at a table in the corner scissoring a pile of exchanges. "Are you," said Col. Thompson as he pounded his cane upon the office floor, "are you the blankety blank scoundrel who edits this paper?" The young man in the corner looked up, snatched a cocked revolver from the table drawer and leveled it at Col. Thompson. "I insist," said he, "upon my parliamentary rights. I call for a division of the question."

And he was accorded them, and the scrimmage did not come off.

Paris's Summer Music.

Paris is getting ahead of Paris as a place of amusement. More than ever is becoming the great summer resort of the world where the usual dog-days is not known.

Climatic conditions have favored the season of the last two seasons, in contrast with the summers which reigned a few years ago, and now the season is coming into town during the month of August as plentifully and enjoyably as though it were a month earlier.

The restaurants of our hotels give evidence of this mid-season popularity. The restaurants allure, and good bands make music for us all summer. Little garden restaurants abound through the city, and all of them have their clientele of sensible people who have learned the delights of picturesque New York and Boston, one of its summer markets.

Of course, as we have not yet discovered exactly what form of summer entertainment is best suited to the tastes of the throngs of strangers as well as dwellers, who from six o'clock each evening chase the cool breezes that the hour offers.

The roof-gardens still have their followers, but there seems ample room for the development of some original form of entertainment; the outdoor theater will not be long for, with plenty of good will, to a novel plan that would seem to leave too much need for effort on the part of the auditor.

Some of the Jersey coast hotels a pleasant idea is put in each evening during the dinner in the casino. A band of well-trained Neapolitan singers renditions two women and three sing and dance at one end of the with an impromptu effect that is At the conclusion of the they march up and down between tables singing and garnering coin.

A new French restaurant in town ... and but thoroughly enjoyable ... is to be found. A young man dining with a lady at one of the tables suddenly nods to the leader of the orchestra, and then begins to sing, remaining seated at the table, his cigar or wine glass held in his hand, while his voice, which is an excellent one, charms the other diners.

In the Waldorf tea room a season or two ago a band of Swiss singers added novelty to the scene every afternoon from 4 until 6.

Our summer theater must be outdoors and there must be music and a café, something as at the German garden on the East Side that is always well patronized by opera-loving and beer-loving Germans.

We are just waking to the possibilities of our city in summer time, where, in spite of the newspapers proclaiming that every one is out of town, we find our hotels thronged to their dining-room doors seven evenings in the week.—[Dramatic Mirror.

Mascagni Foolishness.

The Mascagni farce has reached its climax. Having failed in his appeal against the government's decision depriving him of the post of director of the Rossini Conservatory at Pesaro, he now, with diabolical cruelty, theatens to leave his ungrateful country forever and settle in Paris, following the example of other illustrious Italians. Nay, with a refinement of malice almost unparalleled in the history of mankind, he declares that when he dies he will be buried in Pere-Lachaise, thus depriving his country of the honor of having even his illustrious bones. Mascagni had had the impudence to write to the Italian Minister of Education that could "leave his pupils whenever and for as long as he pleased, to give concerts in Madrid, Berlin, or Budapest, and that the Minister, ignorant as to musical affairs, had no business to bother about the Pesaro Conservatory." When the case was up before the court, he had three lawyers, who spoke seven hours in his behalf. But the government's counsel, Calabrest, spoke twenty minutes, but every one of his sentences was "a sledge-hammer blow," as a Roman correspondent writes. He declared that for months the conservatory pupils had had no lessons, and many of them went home. There was no regular plan of instruction, but only a hasty preparation at the beginning for one or two concerts. For whole terms, he said, Mascagni was absent and his pupils were idle, yet they received their certificates all the same. It is to be hoped that the Mascagni incident may now be considered closed. After all, the man is to be pitied as much as he is to be blamed. It was the foolish newspaper writers and the audiences that went wild over that tawdry half-opera, half-operetta, "Cavalleria Rusticana" (his only successful work,) that gave him his swelled head; and swelled head is the most difficult malady in the world to cure.—[New York Evening Post.

AT HOME AND ABROAD.

Leonora Jackson, the violinist, is in Prague at the present time, where she is studying with Sevcik, the teacher of Kubelik, Marie Hall, Kocian and many others of more or less prominence.

Jan Kubelik, the violinist, was married at Debreczin, Hungary, last Wednesday to Countess Marianne Csaky, niece of Von Szell, former Premier of Hungary.

Mme. Bloomfield Zeisler is spending the summer at the Antlers in Colorado Springs. She is accompanied by her husband, Sigmund Zeisler, the eminent lawyer, whose recent illness caused considerable uneasiness.

Two of the world's best composer-pianists have been busy of late. Paderewski has written a work for four part choir, soon to be produced in Warsaw, and Eugene d'Albert has just finished a new opera entitled "Tiefland," which will be sung at Prague two months hence.

Pius X, the new Pope, is a learned musician and an excellent performer on the piano and on the organ. He it was who first discovered the talent of Father Lorenzo Perosi, the composer of several successful oratorios. The then Cardinal Sarto appointed Father Perosi head of the choir of St. Mark's, in Venice, and later Pope Leo called him to Rome and placed him in charge of the Sistine chapel.

The newspapers are constantly talking about $2000 and $10,000 Italian violins. At a recent auction sale of the collection of a well-known fancier in London, the highest price was paid for a Stradivarius, which was knocked down for $2200. A genuine Guarnerius fetched only $320, while a Vuilliaume went for $150. Speaking of violins, a teacher in Munich named Ettle, is said to have patented a new model of a violin which will not only facilitate playing, but will offer composers a chance for new effects.

Edwin Grasse, a young American violinist, who has won notable distinction in Berlin, Vienna, Leipsic, Munich and London, will make his first concert tour in this country this season. Since young Grasse graduated with highest honors from the Royal Conservatory at Brussels, where he was under the personal guidance of Caesar Thompson, he has made brilliant appearances with the great European orchestras and in recital, and he brings very flattering encomiums of his gifts and his art from the German critics.

The Daily Telegraph's Paris correspondent states that bad news has been received of Mme. Emma Calvé's state of health. She had arranged to appear for the first time, not as a singer, but as an actress, at Orange, and to give some recitations on the stage of the theater there. But the manager of the Orange performances has just received the following telegram from her: "Am in despair; very indisposed with heart affection. I had a syncope this morning which lasted half an hour. My life is threatened. My most sincere regrets and apologies for not having let you know sooner. [Signed] Emma Calvé."

Two Cincinnatians, Ysabel Kaplan and S. William Brady, have written a romantic comic opera, entitled "The Queen of Laughter," which will be the Bostonian's premiere production for the coming season. The theme is a romantic and fanciful one, the action of the play taking place in a delightful country called the Isle of Laughter. It is said Mr. Brady's music is of the old Bostonian type, with rollicking drinking songs, romantic serenades, etc. The other opera, which will be done by the organization later in the season, is called "The Revolutionists." It is by Goodall and Weixelbaum, and it will be under Mr. Goodall's stage management.

The refusal of the Wagner family to participate in the ceremonies at the unveiling of the Wagner monument, which will take place in Berlin in October 1, and in the musical congress incidental thereto, was due to the fact that the Emperor declined to accept the programme offered by the family through Prof. Thode, son-in-law of Frau Cosima Wagner, showing the development of Wagner's genius. It would have required both the Royal Operahouse and the Royal Theater fourteen days to produce it. The Emperor said it was impossible to do so. It is desired to make Munich the great Wagner center. Hence, neither the Munich court orchestra nor a prince of the royal house of Bavaria will attend the Berlin unveiling. The Emperor has arranged to unveil the monument. Andrew Carnegie's acceptance of an invitation to be present has been received and referred by the committee to the court master of ceremonies, with the expectation that the Emperor will request Mr. Carnegie be presented to him.

Saint Saens seems to be abdicating the field of musical composition in order to win new laurels as a dramatic author. Last winter a humorous comedy of his, with an antique background, was given at the Odeon. Now he is going to furnish another surprise to his numerous admirers. His operas, "Parysatis" and "Dejanira," will soon be performed upon the open air, antique stage at Besieres. Between these two musical creations Saint-Saens will interpolate a dramatic novelty. Again it is a comedy, but one in four acts and five stage pictures. Its title is "King Apepi," and the plot is based on Cherbuliez's novel, "Les Amours Fragiles." The comedy will be presented by actors from the Paris Odeon, who are said to be most enthusiastic upon the subject of the new piece.

Paganini's celebrated duel with Lapont created a sensation at the time. The Frenchman, who considered himself the greatest living violinist, challenged the Italian to a public duel, with violins as weapons. He brought his own very difficult duets, which he had thoroughly studied, for the fray. He sent Paganini the parts he was to play a few days before the concert, but the great Italian disdained to look at them, saying the public rehearsal would be time enough. At the rehearsal Paganini played his parts straight off at sight so perfectly that everybody was astonished, most of all Lapont. In the evening Paganini added variations, and made his part so difficult by playing all sorts of double stopping that Lapont was completely disconcerted, and could not play even as well as usual. The public, of course, proclaimed Paganini the victor, and Lapont left town in a rage.

English Women in Politics.

English women are not only keen, but intelligent politicians. They read the debates, they study questions, they follow the by-elections and wade through columns of campaign literature. And being in constant and intimate touch with the makers of English politics, their information is always of the best.

Readers of "Lady Rose's Daughter" will remember how naturally Mrs. Humphry Ward made her heroine move through the world of statesmen and diplomats, and how cleverly she gave the impression of a salon that was behind the scenes of all that was worth knowing.

There are many women and many salons like that in London—women who have learned the inside of politics as part of their social education, and salons where they turn their knowledge to admirable use. They are still an unquestionable power in politics. They make and unmake men, they know the last least art of jobbing, they pull strings with a frankness and audacity that a mere man can marvel at from afar.

But though society is political, it is rarely partisan. In normal times party divisions do not stray beyond Westminster, and much of the easy-goingness and moderation of English politics is due to the fact that the leaders on both sides are continually meeting outside the house and dining at the same table. I do not suppose that it has ever occurred to an American Democrat that unity in his party might be promoted if the wives of the more prominent leaders would ask the wives and womenkind of the rank and file to occasional "at homes" in Washington. Yet this is precisely the experiment that is now being tried in London by the wives of leading Liberals. That again proves the closeness of the relationship between politics and society.

But the English woman who is also a politician does not by any means confine her activities to the drawing-room. She sits on political committees, forms political leagues, makes political speeches, and does the work of political canvassing during election time to perfection. Already Mr. Chamberlain's scheme has brought into being three large and vigorous associations, composed entirely of women, to support or oppose it. The Primrose League is known all over the world as one of the best organized and most influential electioneering agencies in existence. It is, at any rate, a singular token of the political capacity and enthusiasm of English women. Perhaps it may be objected that their activity, after all, does not amount to much. That may be so. But there is still left over an ample sphere in which they may ply their arts.—[London Correspondent Harper's Weekly.

Besides the two ovens of my gas cookstove, I put an extra one on top; it's a little like painting the lily.

Three big ovens for one small family!

It's really useful, with little no account stoves, that nobody wants; I save gas with it; takes less gas—I suppose I save about two or three cents a baking by it.

DOWN IN OLD MEXICO.

Great Expectations for the West Coast of Republic.

Irrigation of Mexican Arable Lands Discussed.

Machinery Working a Revolution. Talk About Education. Opening for Vegetarians.

BY EDWARD C. BUTLER.

(SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.)

CITY OF MEXICO, Aug. 31.—Dr. G. M. Emrick, of the Paso del Rio Industrial Company of Colima, passed through the capital last Tuesday, en route for his old home, Chicago, on a visit of recreation. During the past five years Dr. Emrick and his associates have been engaged in agricultural pursuits on the west coast of Mexico, and they confidently expect that portion of the Republic to become to Mexico what California is to the United States. These Americans first purchased, in the State of Michoacan, the Coahuayala estate of 200,000 acres, and about a year and a half ago added to their holdings the 75,000-acre plantation of Gen. Martinez in the State of Colima, both properties verging toward the Pacific. During those five years they have had no sickness on their plantations. On the Colima property these American agriculturists who have put themselves thoroughly into the Mexican venture, are now raising corn, coffee, oranges, rubber, cocoa, vanilla, cocoanuts, tobacco. Dr. Emrick says it is a fine fruit country. The climate, he says, is delightful, ranging about 80 degs. Fahr., in winter and 85 in summer. In Michoacan and in Colima they handle stock as well, and have at present 3,000 head of cattle and 300 horses, mules, etc. The Chinese laborers employed seem to do well, and there is no friction between them and the Mexican peons, although the latter earn only 50 cents while the yellow men earn $1 per day. Mexican planters, carpenters and artisans, however, get better wages than the Chinamen. The native peons have so many holidays that they lose time, and therefore money, while the Chinese stick to their work, and make money.

The Mexican consul at Pensacola, Fla., has addressed a communication to the Foreign Office advising that the representative of an English company now at that place, consulted him as to the probability of being able to make arrangments for the shipment, through the port of Tampico, of consignments of 10,000 and 12,000 Mexican cattle, in lots of 750 each, to South Africa, by sea direct to their distant destination, such consignments being made each year, with the probability of an increasing order after the second year. The request has been referred by the government to the Chamber of Commerce which is too communicate, through the agency in Tampico, with the cattle men in Tamaulipas and Nuevo Leon. This is not the first time that Mexican cattle have been sought for foreign markets, for they have been shipped for many years to the United States and Cuba, but this is the first time that the Mexican cattle men have received an order from South Africa. It will give a stimulus to the industry in Mexico.

A few days since, at the last session of the Geographical and Statistical Society of this capital, a paper was read by Angel M. Dominguez, relating to the important subject of irrigation of Mexican agricultural lands. There are a few large rivers in Mexico, such as the Nazas, Lerma, Chapala, Panuco and Papaloapam, but they have so for been but meagerly harnessed for the work of irrigation, so badly needed in Mexico. Hence the subject is of vital importance to Mexico. Mr. Dominguez pointed out that the physical formation of this country, with its terraced lands and sharp declines, favors an ample system of irrigation, which is needed to develop the agricultural resources of Mexico and enrich it independent of the uncertain yield of the mines. He deals with the question as to who should take the initiative. The opinion prevails among some people that the government should make the outlay, and others think the State or municipal authorities of dry localities should do so, in order to make arable their own lands, and again there are those who are of opinion that no government aid should be rendered, as the improvement is local and is in aid of individual land-owners. The persons who favor the first plan claim that although the improvement does benefit a certain district, yet the benefit reacts to the benefit of the nation as a whole, which, for instance, comes into the acquisition of an increased revenue through increased taxation predicated to better crops.

Those who favor the employment of State or municipal funds, claim that such expenditure should not be at the expense of the Federal government, as the improvement more directly concerns the State or municipality. The third party insist that the obligations of no governmental department ought to be pledged to such a work, and that sooner or later capital will be forthcoming from private sources for all such work as may be found necessary. The paper evidenced that none of the three opinions was absolutely correct in the concrete. In some cases the farmers will be able to undertake the work unaided, but in other cases they need the aid of the government. As a rule, lands irrigated bring a better price than dry and unproductive lands and this is true of so-called government lands as of those belonging to private parties, and therefore the government would do well to expend money in cases where the water supply of lake and river is situated far from regular plantations. This would place a higher value on government lands and encouragement be given to immigration and agriculture. People do not mind paying the government higher prices than $1 or $2 per hectare for lands with water.

Labor-saving agricultural implements are also producing a revolution in Mexico, especially as most of this machinery, eight-tenths of it is American make, manufactured in a country where the music of mechanical wheels is a ceaseless song. From time immemorial the Mexican peon has plowed with a crooked stick, called a plow, but in form and composition identical to the wooden plows of the ancient Pharaohs. He still uses it in many places in the Republic, where the steel-bladed plow of the inventive Americanos has not found its way, but the hacendados of today are discovering the infinite superiority of the latter over the former. The Mexican peons used to carry the loaded wheelbarrows on their heads rather than roll them along, as did also the Indian coolies prior to 1857, but they are commencing to learn the difference and the decided advantage of the wheeled carretillas over the baskets they formerly used. All is a question of time. The transition came in Egypt and in India and is recurring in Mexico.

The education of the Mexican peon is another requisite to the improvement of the agricultural outlook in Mexico. In the United States where education is so wide-spread, and in a sense obligatory, the children of farmers and even farm-laborers have the opportunity to improve their minds and consequently their condition. An educated mentality means an improved material condition. The climate is kindlier in Mexico than it is in the United States, so is the soil, and the Mexican farmer and peon has that much advantage over the American. Education was made compulsory by President Diaz among the Mexican Indians eight or ten years ago, but such is the backwardness and conservatism of those people that the movement has not taken much headway. The well-known engineer, Adolfo Barreriza, advocates the creation by the Federal government of what he styles "Escuelas Regionales," district schools for the teaching of the children of the peons, and thus bring up a new and more progressive generation. In these schools he thinks instruction could be profitably imparted as to the best products possible for each locality and the best method of cultivation, etc. While it would be obviously impossible to interest the peon in a technical school where things are done by rote and when the course of study stretches over five or six years, with all the addenda of the laboratories, museums, and cabinets, the idea, in general, is to lift the young thought over the grubbing, vegetable life of the average Mexican peon.

The Mexican Herald thinks that the time is ripe for the vegetarians to jump into Mexico and establish the doctrines of their order, for the meat trust has cinched the situation, the beef and the people. The same outcry was raised by the papers here when Serrano "cinched" the pork industry by getting control of all the tocinerias in the capital. But people long since have grown accustomed to the high price of pork, and it is no longer expensive, for people are used to it. Besides, people have more money than they had ten years ago. Things cost more, but there is more money with which to meet the bills. It is to be hoped that the fears of the Mexican Herald may not be realized. One thing the public has always held against the butchers of the city is the fact that they cut off most of the fat from the beef and turn it into tallow for candles. There are 200 churches (Catholic) in the city, more than half of them in operation, and they seem to need so many candles. At least that is the excuse the butchers give when one asks for fat beef. As to the present high price of meat, the wholesale butchers say it is due to a meat famine. The cattle, they say, did not fatten in time to supply the market. They have for the killing not more than 200 to 250 head of cattle per day, whereas the needs of the city heretofore required not less than 350 to 400 per day. They say it is the season for the advance in the price of choice beef to the retailer from 19 cents to 30 cents per kilogram. The retailer now charges 65 cents for a porterhouse steak which he sold a few weeks ago at 40 cents. The retailers allege that the wholesalers are combining in a trust, but at the same time the retailer dutifully keeps up the charges as high as he can. Mr. Castiday, the buyer for the American meat market, thinks that the prices will lessen within the next three weeks, by which time the grass-fed cattle of the country will be available for consumption. A. E. Noble thinks the trust proposes to keep up the prices.

Capt. W. G. Raoul, president of the Mexican National Railroad, when asked as to the reported consolidation of the National and the Interoceanic railways, both now controlled by the Mexican government, seemed as ignorant of any such project as the Dowager Empress of China is of Boxer movements. He, however, finally stated that the talk of a merger was still in the contemplative stage, but there was no immediate prospect of the consolidation. Not only was such a scheme, he added, comparatively impracticable, but the revenues of the two roads are small and until such time as the revenue would insure reasonable returns on money invested, such merger was out of the question. Speaking of the Monterey-Matamoros branch, Capt. Raoul said it furnished the National an outlet long desired. The Laredo outlet gives very quick and close connection with the Middle and Western States, but the National wanted a direct route toward the eastern part of the United States. This will be furnished via Matamoros, and it is expected that short cut will be finished by the end of the year.

In the course of conversation, Marquis De Prat y Nantouillet, the Spanish Minister, said that the Spanish language could be found in the East. When the Jews were expelled from Spain they took refuge in the dominions of the Sultan of Turkey. Though ages have passed they have since then retained the language they spoke in Spain, but considerably old-fashioned. If one may be permitted that word. Just as in New England, the descendants of the Puritans have retained many words and phrases of Elizabethan English as found in Shakespeare, but now obsolete in England, so the Spanish spoken by the Jews or their descendants in Turkey savors of Cervantes and other great Spanish writers of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. At Constantinople there are theaters where the Spanish drama, both of the old classical and modern schools, is given and in the bazaars of that ancient city, kept by Hebrews descended from the old-time Jews, Spanish is the ordinary lingual vehicle.

There is some quiet excitement in official circles over the stand said to have been taken by the well-known Jalapa lawyer, Lic. Manuel R. Gutierrez, director of the Normal School at Jalapa, capital of the State of Vera Cruz. This is one of the finest educational institutions in the country and is supported by the State. Director Gutierrez is said to have contemplated or already put into practice, the custom of religious exercises in the Normal School, conducted by Catholic priests. The Federal Constitution of the republic reads as follows: "Church and state are independent one of the other. Congress cannot dictate laws establishing or inhibiting any religion." (Article 1, amendment of September 25, 1873, to Federal Constitution of 1857.) In view of this and the further explanatory constitutional provision giving the state sole civil and criminal jurisdiction in the republic, to the extent of substituting the oath with "its penalties and obligations" for the more formal and godless protest to state the truth on one's honor, the Liberal papers in this city are criticising Prof. Gutierrez, and if they make out a case against him, probably he will be requested by Gov. Dehesa to resign his post. The Pais and other Catholic papers in this city are defending the professor and the Imparcial and Liberal papers are attacking him, for his breach of duty is serious if substantiated, given the great sacrifices undertaken by the Mexicans to divorce church and state.

At the General Hospital yesterday an interesting water test was made by Robert Gorsuch Hart, the young New York civil engineer, who represents the Acme Water and Storage Company of that city. The demonstration was made in the presence of Roberto Gayol, ex-City Engineer and now Director of Public Works of the Federal district, Col. Miguel Ahumada, Governor of Jalisco, Maj. Robert B. Gorsuch, the oldest member of the American colony, uncle to the young demonstrator and himself a civil engineer of note, and other gentlemen interested in the problem of water supply for the City of Mexico. The new plant installed in the General Hospital is of low and high pressure, two distinct systems. They are operated by the same machinery, pump and compressor. The low-pressure system is of two water tanks, 8x33 feet, with capacity of 12,500 gallons each, and an air tank 8x33 feet. The high-pressure system is of two tanks, one for water and one for air, each 5x13 feet. The operating machinery, the first of its kind installed in this city, is in units of power, one a steam plant consisting of a pump 7½x4½x13 inches, and a compressor 6x7x6 inches; the other an electric plant driven by a fifteen-horse-power motor; a belted air compressor 6x7 inches and a triplex pump 5x6 inches. The low pressure is arranged so that the 25,000-gallon storage can be entirely utilized under a uniform pressure of twenty-five to thirty pounds, and all the water discharged from the two tanks by means of the pressure from the air tank, governed by a patent regulating valve and controller, the former admitting the air from the air tanks to the water tanks as the water is used, thus insuring a uniform pressure. The high-pressure system is operated by the same method as the low except that it maintains a uniform high pressure of the water of from fifty to sixty pounds. The pressure in either case can be increased or diminished at will. When tested the low-pressure system, with a hose of a three-quarter-inch nozzle threw a stream of water seventy feet in air. Mr. Hart was congratulated for the success of his experiment, quite of importance in this city, where the question of water pressure is so much discussed.

The funeral services ordained by the archbishop in honor of the late Pope Leo XIII, are to be held in the cathedral next Friday, the 4th of September. The immense edifice is to be decorated with unusual splendor for the ceremonies of the interment of the remains of the revolutionary hero, Gen. Nicolas Bravo, on the eighth, and the decorations are to serve on the two occasions, except the suppression of the triple crown and other insignia of the Pope. The Governor of the State of Guerrero, at whose capital Chilpancingo, have rested the ashes of the distinguished Mexican chieftan of 1823, proposes to surround the occasion with dignity and patriotic demonstration. In accordance with the decree of the Mexican Congress of May 28 last, this reinterment is allowed, so that the nation's dead can rest under the cathedral domes until the completion of the National Pantheon. The convoy started yesterday (Sunday) at 10 a.m. from Chilpancingo. The ashes were deposited in a funeral urn made of precious woods grown in Guerrero, octagonal in form and culminating in a dome-shape, decorated with gold and silver cords and silver applique, the gold and silver being mined in Guerrero, and the urn was encased in a metal box. The escort for the ride over the mountains was composed of gentlemen appointed by the government with a detachment of the picturesque rurales. On the arrival of the committee in this city the urn will be mounted on an artillery carriage and taken to Chapultepec, on the 7th of September, and the procession the next day to the cathedral will include all the school children in the capital and some 10,000 people besides, members of civic societies, army officers, government officials, the procession being headed by President Diaz. The ceremonies at Chapultepec will occur on the anniversary of the defense of that castle against the Americans, but those at the cathedral will be more elaborate. It is scarcely eighty years since from the pulpit of that great cathedral issued the anathemas of the church against Hidalgo and other leaders in the War of Independence, and the great gates of carved cedar will now open to welcome one of those very heroes, hushed in dreamless sleep.

Secretary of the Treasury Limantour in submitting to Congress the budget for receipts and expenditures of the Federal government for the fiscal years 1902-1903, closing June 30, 1903, estimated the year's revenues at $64,823,400. As a matter of fact the receipts have far overshot that mark, being $77,150,000, or $12,326,830 more than Mr. Limantour looked for, a very eloquent proof of the astonishing prosperity of the Mexican republic. The Federal revenue in 1895-1896 was $50,521,470, and it has increased in geometrical ratio ever since that fiscal.

Next Tuesday the Young Men's Christian Association of this capital will be one year old, and it is preparing to celebrate the event becomingly. On September 20, 1902, the young men desirous of organizing such an association, gathered together 100 strong, and had an informal opening, with a hymn or two and a few simple exercises, thus declaring the building open for work along their peculiar line of Christian endeavor. They have done a great deal of good, and the association now has a membership of about four hundred, and is self-supporting, and has one of the finest-equipped buildings that can well be imagined.

The biggest purchase of real estate in the Federal district this week was the purchase by a group of Germans of the famous Huerta del Carmen, a piece of ground containing 200,000 square meters. The price paid was about $120,000 silver. This property is a portion of the immense landed estates in San Angel and Coyoacan, once owned by the Carmelite fraternity, vested in that religious order by the King of Spain, as was the custom in the good old colonial days when immense tracts of lands were deeded to the religious orders by kings and conquistadores, who wished to conciliate the church. High walls built centuries ago by slaves under the Spanish command surround this wildwood spot, made rich by wondrous profusion of flowers, growing unheeded and uncultivated, thousands of fruit trees yield apples, pears, peaches and grapes; streams of water thread the deep underbrush. There are a few clearings in the tangle, and it is the idea of the parties purchasing the place to cut it up into lots and put it on the market for country homes. Somewhat recently a party of Americans from Kansas City, Chicago and Pittsburgh visited the interesting place, and made an offer, which, they say, was accepted by the owner, and in all likelihood they will contest the present sale on that account.

Dr. A. H. Suggett of Marysville, Cal., arrived here this week, accompanied by his wife. He left yesterday for the state of Chiapas, to visit a plantation in that State in which he is interested. It has about 20,000 acres under cultivation, mostly in rubber, of which there are 10,000 trees planted. Dr. and Mrs. Suggett will return here in a fortnight.

J. N. Rose, botanist for the Smithsonian Institution at Washington, D. C., is again here. He was here two years ago, when he made quite a collection. Mr. Rose works in conjunction with the Government School of Medicine, and the American scientist brought on this occasion a valuable collection of rare plants and shrubs from various foreign countries, which he presented to the school. He is now operating in the section of country surrounding Yautepec, where he has just discovered a new tree; it is of the genus Juliana, somewhat related to the walnut, but which bears no fruit save a winged seed resembling that of the maple.

Col. Miguel Ahumada, Governor of the State of Jalisco, is in the city on business, and has had prolonged interviews with President Diaz. The Governor is accompanied by his son, Manuel Ahumada, Jr., who is here on his vacation tour, for he attends school at Boston, Mass. Gov. Ahumada used to be Governor of the State of Chihuahua, and was very much liked there by the many Americans who made that city so close to the frontier, their headquarters for mining and industrial operations. In one respect Col. Ahumada is very American himself, in his great height and girth, for he will stand 6 feet 6 inches, and weighs 250 to 270 pounds.

The cities of Spain have summer theaters, some of them as large as opera-houses, in which performances of filmsy plays are regularly given. These, however, are a mere sideshow. North Dakota River Stations.

The United States Geological Survey has established seven new river stations and renewed four of the five old stations in North Dakota, so that eleven stations are now in operation in this State. The stations in the eastern part of the State have been established to determine the amount of water power available and for other general purposes. In the western part of the State, which is semi-arid, the stations have been established to determine the amount of water available for irrigation.

This region has no large rivers except the Missouri, which has only a small fall, not so great as most irrigation canals. It is not probable, therefore, that this stream can be used for irrigation purposes until a later time, when the land shall have become more valuable.

A thorough examination is being made of all the streams and the lands in North Dakota west of the Missouri River, with a view to irrigation projects. If any project appears to be favorable, detailed surveys, and estimates will be made, and, if the project is then found feasible, it will be recommended for construction.

An examination is also being made of the cheap and abundant lignite resources of the State in the hope that lignite can be utilized for fuel in pumping water for irrigation in certain localites, where long canals would be impracticable.

GOOD STORIES FOR CHILDREN---By Walt McDougall

How a Pair of Magic Spectacles Saved Three Children's Lives and Brought Them Riches

HERE were four of the McSwiggan children—Bessie, the oldest; Brady, Marie and Genevieve, but Genevieve was too little to really have much to do in the story. In fact, this is Bessie's story almost entirely, although, as Brady always says, had she not gone hunting with him it never would have happened.

These four children were orphans who lived with their uncle, an old and very rich man, who had often said that he would leave them all his money when he died, but it happened that when he passed away his will could not be found, and everything, house, lands, stocks, bonds and all, went to a distant relative, who hated children and who refused to support them at all.

They were finally allowed to live in a tumbledown hut in the Matchinnecock Woods, of which you perhaps have heard. The hut was repaired by 10-year-old Brady in a clever manner, so that the rain did not come in in more than seven places and a door would remain closed when they put a stone against it. Bessie was housekeeper, while Brady went hunting for squirrels, rabbits, quail and other game. Marie was housemaid, and she made vigorous war on spider webs and flies, and, beside that, she saw that Genevieve fell into no mischief; yet Genevieve was the innocent cause of everything that happened in this story.

One morning after a rain Brady wandered very far from home in search of partridges, because Bessie had said that she was tired of rabbit and quail. He was in a place that was right at the foot of the mountains, which loomed up dark blue against the white clouds that were piled up behind them like gigantic masses of ice cream, and unless he climbed up the slope he could go no farther. Here, he knew, he would soon find partridges, for even now he could hear one drumming in the dark underbrush a short distance above him, and so he sat down to rest.

Now, whether he was more watchful than usual, being on a partridge hunt, or whether his eyes were a little sharper that morning, I know not, but he suddenly espied at a great distance a little man, a dwarf, in fact, stealing along a ridge of gray rocks, with his gaze bent upon the valley below, so that he never saw Brady. The boy was startled at first, but remembering that a dwarf could scarcely harm a boy who had a gun in his hands, he rose and crept slowly toward the little man. Before he neared him, however, both of them were startled by a flock of partridges which rose so suddenly and with such a tremendous flurry of wings that Brady almost fell over backward, while the dwarf, with one surprised glance, darted into a pile of fallen boulders and vanished.

Brady hunted around for him, but at last gave up the search and went after the birds instead, and soon shot enough for the little family. Then he returned home, where he narrated his adventure.

"It was a gnome," declared Bessie, who was well versed in fairy lore.

"There is no doubt of that," replied Brady. "He vanished among the rocks just exactly like one."

"To-morrow, when you hunt, I will go with you," said she, "and perhaps I may see him, too."

Brady hardly thought that hunting was a fit diversion for a girl, but he finally said that she might go with him, and in the morning she started off in company with her brother, dressed in a brown gown. They reached the foot of the mountains without adventure of any kind, and the first thing they saw was the little man stretched out under a tree fast asleep. They stole upon him, and he did not awake until Brady was almost within touching distance, and then, with a start, he looked up, saw them, and before they could say "Jack Robinson" he had darted away.

"There, you've frightened him away!" exclaimed Bessie, regretfully.

"I said that's what would happen. I wish we had called him and waked him up gently."

"I'll bet he would have skipped just the same," replied her brother.

"But see! He has left his spectacles!" she said, and picked up a pair of large steel-mounted spectacles from the grass where the dwarf had slept. Brady examined them with little curiosity, for it never occurred to either of the children that there might be anything peculiar about them, and then he put them in his pocket without thinking that perhaps the gnome might need them. Then they went hunting and returned home in the afternoon without again seeing the little man.

The next day, while Bessie was in her tiny garden weeding her cabbage bed, she suddenly bethought herself of these spectacles, and asked Brady where they were. He produced them, and she put them on. Said she:

"They are nothing but just ordinary glass, like window glass. I can see better without them."

Brady tried them on and stared fixedly at the sky.

"Huh! Guess he wears them to put on airs. What's a gnome want with spectacles, anyhow?" Suddenly he started and stared more intently, this time at a tree trunk, and then an expression of wonder came over his features.

"What's the matter?" cried his sister, anxiously. "What do you see?"

"I see something inside of the tree!" he replied, not removing his eyes. "It's a big lead bullet that's been shot into the tree long ago," he added. "I can see it plainly!"

Bessie put the spectacles on her nose and stared at the tree, and in a moment she, too, could see far into the wood through the rough bark, and there she, too, saw a big bullet embedded in the grain of the wood, deep in near the tree's heart.

"They are magic spectacles!" she cried.

"Sure," added her brother, confidently. "I knew that as soon as I saw that bullet in there!" Then they tried them on all sorts of things. They found that they could see far into everything, just as if all substances were transparent glass, after looking for a few moments fixedly, and they saw the ants, the worms and moles far in the earth busy at their toil, bugs, beetles and insects beneath the thick bark, bees in their hives, chicks inside of eggs, butterflies within their cocoons, squirrels in their holes, and, finally, Bessie, looking into an ordinary round cobblestone, was surprised to see within its rough material, first, a whitish crystal, and then, right in the centre, a beautiful violet amethyst.

Of course, that is common enough, for that's how amethysts come; but to see it without breaking open the rough stone was truly marvelous. They played all day with these magic spectacles and had no end of fun, and all of the children took turns at making discoveries, until at evening they were quite tired of the new plaything, and when they went to bed the spectacles were replaced in Brady's coat pocket and soon forgotten, until the day came when they were needed for more than play.

The four children never knew that the gnome had sought for them and finally tracked Bessie and Brady almost to the hut; but he came no nearer, because the path crossed a brook, and a gnome, as perhaps you are aware, cannot cross a stream, so he went back home in despair, for he needed the spectacles in his business, which was that of finding gold and silver far down in the earth.

Well, the summer had gone and autumn had come, when one evening Brady returned laden with game and found not a soul in the hut. Things were left around just as if the children were out at play, and everything looked as though they must be somewhere about; but after he had called Bessie, Marie and Genevieve again and again, he came at last to the conclusion that something dreadful had happened to them. Of course, that's what we always think when people don't come home on time; but something had really happened to the three girls.

It was too dark to seek for tracks in order to discover in what direction they had gone, although Brady was very skilful in such things—almost as clever as an Indian—so at last he went to bed resolved to rise at dawn and go forth, unless they returned in the night, which, of course, they didn't.

At the first faint gleam of day over the treetops he awoke and sprang up. Out he went, and soon found their footprints through the tall grass along the brook, where the damp earth retained the print plain as a book of each little foot, and toward a broad, natural meadow, where they often gathered wild flowers. Here all traces suddenly ceased completely as if they all had flown up into the air. He walked all about the meadow, but there was no sign of them, and if they had gone into the air, he was soon certain that they had not come down anywhere near the meadow.

Then, making a wide circle again, far wider than before, he was about to give up in despair, when his eye fell on one of Bessie's shoes lying on the ground. As soon as he examined it and the earth beneath it he saw that it must have fallen from above, and also from quite a distance in the air, as it had made a dent in the hard ground where it had fallen. This, although it convinced Brady that something that flew or sailed in the air, like an airship, had taken his sisters away, did not comfort him nor help him to an explanation of what had happened to them. Following the direction in which the shoe lay from the meadow where they had been taken up, he proceeded toward the woods, and soon he found another shoe, which had as surely fallen from the sky. Now he hastened along as fast as possible, looking carefully to right and left for traces, and after a few yards he found Marie's left slipper, and further on the right one.

Soon night came. Brady laid himself down under a tree and slept until morning and hastened on, although now he was in a land that was entirely unknown to him. Enormous trees shaded the ground and tall ferns grew thickly everywhere, while strange, unshapely, long-legged birds squawked in marshy places. Now and then animals that he had never seen before appeared among clumps of bushes and vanished noiselessly, as if about to steal upon the bold intruder from behind as he pushed through some canebrake or dark wood.

He carried his gun and was not afraid of these animals, but he feared that perhaps wolves dwelt in the darker forest, and these he dreaded, as any small boy would, for he knew that one gun would be of little use against a pack of ravenous wolves, or even a bear. Still, although fear clutched him by the throat now and then when he was hidden in the woodland growth, he kept right on, with his gaze fixed ahead, hoping to see some sign of his dear sisters.

After a time he came out of the forest and upon a level plain so vast and limitless that it was like the ocean, for he could not see across it; yet he started to make his way to the far-distant horizon quite as confidently as he had pressed on through the forest.

When night fell he was alone in a sea of tall grass, and there he slept.

At daybreak he went on, and ere noon he saw far ahead a tall tower looming up against a deep blue sky. As he neared it he saw that it was of gray stone, without anything like a house anywhere about, standing like a ruin, solitary and monumental in the desert. It looked so queer and so uncanny that he suspected that in some manner it was connected with the disappearance of the three girls, and he approached it with caution, circling all about noiselessly. There was a narrow window high up toward the top, but he saw no door until he came close to the tower, when he detected it and perceived that it had been carefully walled up with stones set in mortar.

"How did those who used this tower enter?" he asked himself, as he pondered over this mystery. He sat down to think it over, and suddenly he remembered that the magic spectacles were in his coat pocket. He put them on and stared at the tower.

In a few moments he saw through the thick walls of gray stone and perceived a narrow stairway rising from the ground floor and winding to the roof. Where the window opened in the wall he saw his sisters sitting in a room, all three weeping bitterly and weaving mats of rushes that were wet with tears. His gaze followed the windings of the stairway until it came to an opening in the roof covered with a trapdoor.

Then, realizing the apparent impossibility of entering the tower by the walled-up door or the roof, he looked into the ground at the foot of the tower in dismay and dejection, and suddenly he saw a narrow tunnel that entered the tower's cellar, where a loosely-built barrier of stones only partly barred the doorway of the tunnel. He followed the underground passage across the plain, and soon came to a pile of rock, where he discovered the outer end and entrance to it. Now he knew how to get into the tower, and he almost shouted for joy.

He hastened up the winding stairway until he entered the room where sat his sisters weaving mats wet with tears. They shouted with joy as he appeared, and hugged him, all their tears vanishing instantly, but in a minute Bessie cried:

"The witch! She will soon return! Take us away at once, or she will get you, too!"

"Where is she?" asked Brady.

"She has gone to look for you, I think, because we talked about you," Bessie replied. "She has been gone since daybreak, and may return at any minute or perhaps sooner!"

"How did she get you?" asked the boy.

"We were hunting for Genevieve in the woods not far from the house, when she sailed down from the sky upon us and grabbed us. Then she put us all astride of her broomstick, which stood there waiting, just like a horse, and away she went with us. I thought that you might be able to follow us if we dropped things as we sailed along, and we slyly took off our shoes and stockings and whatever else we could, but after a while she caught us at it and made us sit in front, so she could watch us. I was afraid you never would find us. But we must get away at once."

"I cried all night, too," said Marie.

"She told us that we must stay here a hundred years and never grow up at all, but weave and weave all the time."

"I'll weave her if I catch her!" exclaimed Brady.

"And she told us more things, too," said Marie, "but I forget 'em now."

"I remember," said Bessie. "She said that if we could answer three questions, or get anybody else to answer them, she'd let us go. But I couldn't guess the answers."

"What were the questions?" demanded Brady.

"The first was: 'What is the name of my cat?' The second, 'What's in the box on the shelf?' and the third, 'What mark have I on my left shoulder?' Just think of answering such questions!"

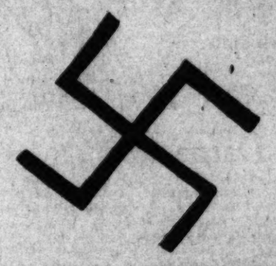
"Well, we can soon find out what's in the box," said Brady, laughing, "for I brought the magic spectacles with me."

"Oh, goody, but I'm glad, for I've been worried over what's in that box!" cried Marie.

Brady stood up on a chair and took down the box, after which he looked fixedly at it for a few moments, when he saw a large book inside. This book he began to read, first the title page, which bore the words in, large, old-fashioned type, "The Witch Book." Then, page after page, becoming so interested, that at last he quite forgot all about the possible return of the dreaded witch. This is partly what he read in this book:

The first chapter was entitled "How to Become a Witch," and it described what she had to do in every detail. Then it told how to ride on a broomstick by taking a firm hold upon it and pronouncing these words: "Arpagum Probono Sesquatom! Fly, my steed!"

After this came most careful directions about holding and attending witches' meetings, how to recognize another witch at sight, how to train a witch cat and how to obtain the "Witch's Stone," which every witch must possess if she wishes to be considered a finished professor of the craft. Upon this stone, a small black piece of slate apparently, is inscribed a most mysterious mark that looks like this:



This is called the "Svastics," and is the most ancient mark or symbol in all the world, being found on rocks of the Stone Age, weapons of the Bronze Age, utensils and garments of more recent times and of every nation, no matter how far apart or how different.

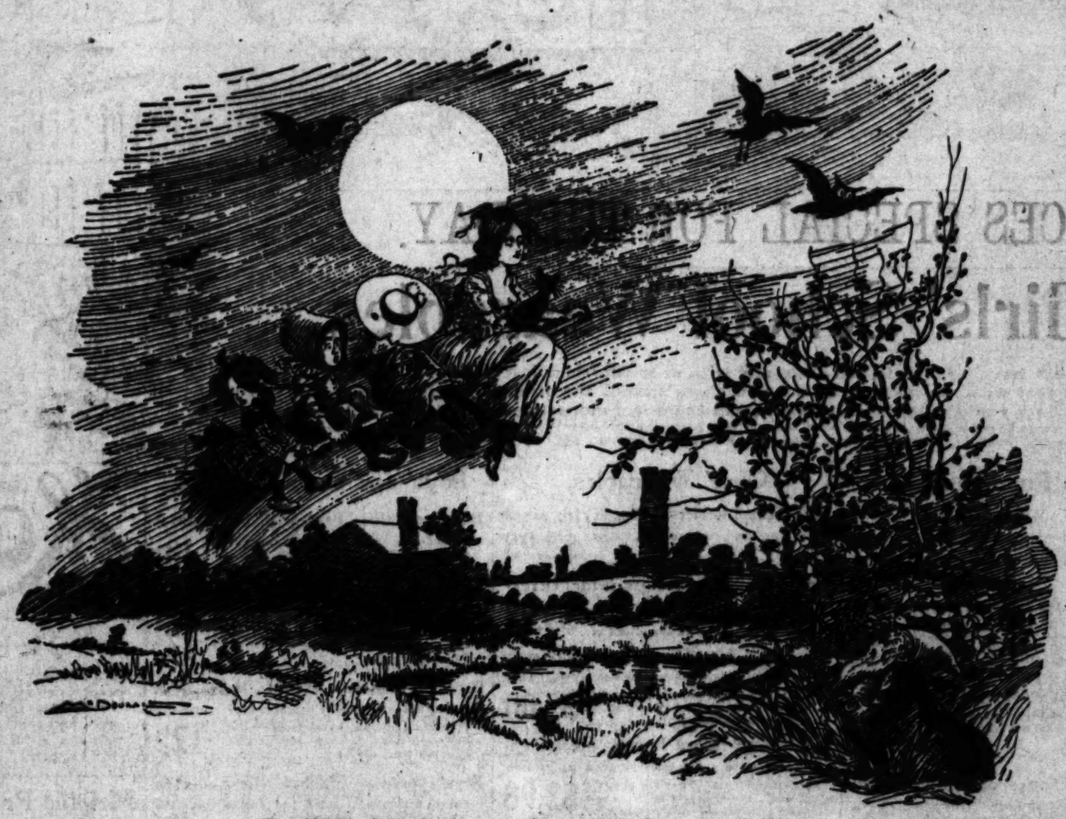
Brady read more than this—how a witch must learn to brew magic potions to make babies cry all night; to cause cows to have the hiccoughs, chickens to have the pip, horses the glanders and blind staggers, and all sorts of magic spells to afflict mankind. I suppose a book collector would give several hundred dollars to obtain possession of such a book as Brady was reading.

He had reached the forty-ninth page, when Marie uttered a stifled shriek.

Before Brady could think of what to do beyond clutching his trusty gun very firmly the witch entered, and, strange to say, she was very beautiful indeed, so beautiful that Brady was astonished, because he had always imagined that a witch was an ugly old hag. She started back in equal astonishment at finding a boy in her tower, but she said at once:

"What are you doing here? How did you enter this room?"

"I'll tell you when you tell me why you have stolen these sisters of mine," replied Brady, not near so much afraid of her as he would have been had she looked like a real witch. In fact, had he not read her witch book he would never have believed her to be one of that profession at all, she appeared so mild and innocent



The Witch Sails Away on a Broomstick With the Children

The Downfall of a Beautiful Witch Whose Three Questions Were Solved—Rides on a Broomstick

"Be careful how you speak to me," [the] witch angrily, but looking somewhat frightened at the boy's gun. "I am a dreadful sorceress, as you, and there is no knowing what I can't do you if I take a notion."

"I am not afraid, not a little bit," said [Brady]. "And you have not answered my question. What right have you to carry away girls?"

"The right of capture," replied the witch. "I take what I wish and do just as I please."

"I've a good mind to act the same way," said Brady.

"What do you mean?" she asked.

"Why, I have a mind to just up and blow a hole in you with this gun," he said. "You may know that it is loaded with a silver bullet, charmed silver bullet, that will do up a witch in a jiffy; and there's no way for you to escape a silver bullet, you know."

Then she was frightened. She fell on her knees and begged him to go away at once, and take his sisters, too. Brady was unwilling to let her off so easily, and he said:

"Here! How about all those questions that you told the girls they might answer? About the mark on you, and what's in that box up there, and your old tomcat's name? Just ask me the questions and see if I can answer them.

So she was compelled to ask the three questions—the name of her cat, the contents of the box and what was the mysterious mark on her left shoulder.

Brady promptly said:

"The cat's name is Richard, the box has in it your witch book and the witch stone, and you have on your left shoulder the mark of the Svastics, which mark is also on the stone; and, besides that, it's on a big rock that we used to roast corn on at our hut. So your old questions are answered now—Gee whiz! She's crumbling away!"

And so she was. Even as a puff ball crumbles or a pie crust, she just crumbled. In a twinkle she was a pile of dust and rags, and her broomstick fell across the pile as if inviting Bessie to sweep it away at once. There never was so sudden a disappearance. They all stared in wonder, when the black cat, with a loud and dismal shriek, shot out of the closet and up the stairs they [went] up in the air. The next moment Richard, the cat, fell past the window and vanished. It was never seen again, so I suppose it was smashed on the stones below and eaten up by buzzards, many of which frequent that region.

"I'll take the witch book and the stone here," said Brady, climbing up and taking it down.

"Let's take the broomstick!" cried Genevieve.

"Why, yes!" exclaimed Bessie. "We need a broom."

"I've got a better idea," said Brady, opening the book and finding the magic words that made the broomstick fly. "You all get astride the old [broom] first!"

They mounted the broomstick and he straddled it last. Then, reading aloud, he said: "ARPAGUM PROBONO SESQUATOM, FLY, MY STEED! And take us straight home, too!" he added, as he felt the broomstick rising. Then it flew out and out of the trap door in the roof, and in less than an hour they were home.

One day they went to town to visit the [lawyer] who had fallen heir to their uncle's property and sent them out into the woods, for Brady wished him to see how fortunate they were in having a vehicle. He was not at home, and the old servant, who loved them dearly, asked them to come in and have some crullers which she had just fried. Brady told her all about their wonderful adventure, and also about the magic spectacles, whereupon she said:

"Then you surely can find the lost will of your uncle made, and which I saw him sign. It is hidden somewhere in the house, I am certain, for he always stuck things away.

Brady promptly put the spectacles on his nose and began to probe the walls and the floors, and after a long and careful scrutiny he saw under sheets of parchment, folded up and tied, that under a board in the room in which his uncle died. They took up the board just as Mr. [Smith], the distant relative, who now held possession, entered the room, and when he asked what they were doing Brady showed him the will. He was very angry, but that did him no good, and he knew that there was no use protesting, for Brady marched off to his late uncle's lawyer, who had drawn up the will, and that was all there was to it.

His uncle had, as he said he would do, left everything to the McSwiggan children, and they became millionaires.

They are happy all day long, but once or twice every summer they all steal away on the magic broomstick, taking the spectacles along, and spend the whole day in the little woodland hut, where Bessie is cook, Marie chambermaid, and Genevieve washes the dishes, and they forget they are millionaires.

On one of these occasions they were all [playing] beyond the brook, when suddenly the little gnome ran out of the rocks, and, falling on his knees, begged them to restore to him his magic spectacles, as his fellow gnomes had driven him away from their home because of his carelessness in losing them, and he could no longer earn his living. They at once handed them over to him, and a happier gnome was never, I think, seen in all the world. TRUE FAIRY STORIES.

SINCE the days of "Pegleg" Smith, about whom fact and fancy have blended in the weaving of a legend of a lost bonanza that lies bleaching somewhere in the fiery desolation of the Mojave Desert, many stories of golden mines and lost treasure caves have lured the prospector to that sunken country. Some of these tales are more interesting than the real history of the discovery of the Gold Road mine, situated twenty-five miles southwest of Kingman, Ariz. The list of Arizona mines published two years ago contained no mention of the Gold Road. This great property was then an undeveloped prospect, and the wealth of gold hidden in its veins was then unknown. Now this property is one of the largest producers in the Territory, its production dating from June 3 of the present year.

The history of the discovery of the Gold Road mine reads like a fable from some fairy tale. Out in Arizona is told the story of how an old Mexican prospector, down on his luck, received a $12 grubstake from Henry Smithville, Sheriff of Mojave County. At that time Sheriff of Mojave County, and while on his way over the mountains to the fats of the Colorado River he stopped on the ridge and kicked up a piece of float that looked good, and upon being assayed proved all that he had anticipated. Of how the old Mexican and his grubstaker each realized $5,000 for their interest in the property, the half of which was negotiated through a local mining promoter.

BIG COMPANY FORMED.

The Gold Road Mining and Exploration Company was organized by C. A. Stephens, William Bayly and Clarence McCormick, all of whom are among the most successful mining operators in the West, and who have already identified with extensive mining interests for many years. These gentlemen acquired possession of the property in September, 1902, but it was not until July the following year that the present company was formed, the intervening time having been spent in developing and opening up the mine.

The property which was acquired lies between the summit of a range of hills and the valley of the Colorado River, which is less than two miles distant in an air line. Twenty-five miles southwest of Kingman, Ariz., and an equal distance from The Needles, Cal. A little camp has grown with the development of the mine, and it at present has a population close to 400 souls. The acreage of the company's holdings is something over 225 acres.

It is in the same vicinity as the Leland mine, which has just completed its mill. Everything points to the early development of other mines in this locality, and it is freely predicted that that portion of the Territory is soon to be the scene of remarkable mining activity.

When the Gold Road was purchased by Mr. Posey and his associates the workings consisted of one tunnel 100 feet in length and a single compartment shaft 140 feet in depth. Both were in ore of a high character that gave every evidence of value and permanence. It was the theory of George Kislingbury, the company's mining expert, that with proper development work the property would become a heavy producer of low-grade ore, he having made the report that the ore would average $14.62 a ton. The conservative nature of this estimate has been more than established by subsequent events. Of late Mr. Kislingbury's report was based the sale of the mine. The latest returns from the mill show values exceeding $17 per ton, while not only have the values increased with depth, but the ledge has also widened, strengthened and proved its permanency. As a result of the policy adopted by C. A. Stephens, the superintendent in charge of the property, an immense body of gold-bearing ore has been opened up. Five mines as young as the Gold Road can show a finer record and the total output for the coming year will only be limited by the energy displayed in the prosecution of its development.

The Gold Road is preeminent in more respects than one. One of the most interesting and modern features in connection with it is its machinery equipment. In both the mine and mill the most modern and perfect mechanical effects have been secured. It is lighted throughout by electricity, and is in every respect a modern mine. Telephones at every level connect with the superintendent's office, and all parts of the property. The engine-room at the millhouse contains ten Fairbanks & Morse gasoline engines, with a combined horse-power of 342, while a 50-horse-power engine is in use at the mine to supply power for the hoist. At Little Meadows, three miles distant, a pumping station furnishes the mine with an ample water supply. Crude oil is used for fuel and 650 gallons are required daily. The oil has proved to be a most inexpensive and thoroughly satisfactory fuel, indeed, were it not for its use it is probable the mine could not be operated profitably without railroad connections.

The mine is operated through a double compartment shaft which has been put down 325 feet. Three levels with extensive drifting has been done, and ore is being milled from all parts of the various levels. Preparations are being made for running the shaft to a depth of 500 feet, with levels at proper intervals. The shaft is equipped with a double cage, or rather a ship, into which the ore cars are emptied on the various levels. The ship is self-operating and upon reaching the surface the ore is automatically dumped into the crusher, from which is empties into the bins over the first tunnel.

In the development of the mine a novel plan has been adopted by C. A. Stephens, the superintendent, which will result in saving thousands of dollars that would otherwise be required for the purchase of timbers. Owing to the high price of lumber delivered at the mine, six feet of ledge is left between each level and only one set of timbers used. The average width of the ore body is twelve feet and immense amounts of ore have been knocked down and are in the stopes ready for the mill. The drifts are tracked the entire length and chutes set at frequent intervals. In operating the mine four electric and two air drills are used, power for the same being supplied from the mill.

Without an exception the plant is one of the most completely equipped mines and mills in Arizona. Not only is the mill well arranged to insure the economical handling of ore, but the machinery installed is of the latest and most approved pattern, and in instances has been manufactured expressly for the company from designs submitted by the superintendent. Both the Llewellyn Iron Works of this city and the Colorado Iron Works of Denver furnished the machinery, which has proved most satisfactory.

In predicting the future of the Gold Road, it is only necessary to take into consideration a few details to establish the fact that as a producer and dividend payer the mine is still in its infancy. Of the 225 acres of rich mineral land owned by the company, less than 10 per cent. has been exploited, and of the veins and ore bodies exposed but a comparatively small portion has averaged less than the body they are now working upon. In the radius of the present development is virgin ground of sufficient extent to occupy the attention of the company for years to come. What the future has in store for the Gold Road no one can definitely tell, but to foresee continued and increasing greatness for the mine does not require the scientific vision of an expert.

BESSIE'S ATONEMENT.

BY SARAH B. KENNEDY.

BESSIE DELANEY, who had been to Washington and seen several theatrical "stars," might tilt her head as she pleased, but the fact remained that the entertainment given by the Smithville Thespians" was a success. Miss Delaney said the performance was lacking in "artistic finish," but Smithville went and paid its money without regret and laughed as it had not laughed in years. True, the histrionics of the Thespians was not of the sort to make people laugh, for in their self-confidence they had essayed a tragedy. But even tragedy to comedy was an easy step with Dickey Holt in the cast. Something was always sure to happen to Dickey.

The trouble which befell him this particular night seemed trivial in its nature, but was far reaching in its consequences. He quite forgot that afternoon to purchase a pair of long hose to wear with the knee breeches of the historical costume in which he was to play the heavy villain, and at the last moment he beheld the maid from the dressing-room to surreptitiously hand a pair for him. These he donned hurriedly that he failed to see the owner's name worked in silk just below the knee. But there were opera glasses in the house, and the audience knew what he wore. The applause accorded him was unexpected as it was gratifying, and he looked compassionately at Belle, the "leading man," who seemed to usurp all the honors. But the most thrilling scene of the second act, where his villainy was denounced, there came an awful moment.

"You are a penniless imposter," stormed John, giving the lines as they were. "Why, the very shoes in which you stand are not your own!"

And then before Dickey could make his scornfully reply a small boy in the front row rose and cried excitedly:

"And neither is the stockings his, for they've got my sister Belle's name on 'em."

After that a permanent recess to pompous tragedy was impossible; even John Moore's imposing voice and Jessie Lane's well-simulated tears failed to keep the spectators in awe. Dickey's stockings were the "stars" of the goodlie companie," and every time he appeared he was greeted with shouts and applause. Though the delighted audience went out into the night regretting no penny spent for tickets, behind the scenes Dickey had the whole troupe about his ears. But the only criticism that hurt him was Jessie Lane's. With Jessie he had long believed himself in love, and it hurt when she said:

"You quite spoiled most of my part, and you made my poor little sister Belle more miserable than I can tell you."

The next night he called upon her to make his peace, and found John Moore in the parlor ahead of him.

"Oh, I have quite forgiven you," laughed Jessie, "but Belle has vowed vengeance against you, and if you are wise you will go out yonder on the porch and pacify her. You used to be quite a hero in her eyes."

So Dickey left John with Jessie, and went miserably out to where Belle, aged 16, swung into a hammock and pouted. He had known and petted her in days gone by, and he thought soon to smooth her ruffled plumage. Instead he found her obdurate and full of reproaches. However, he must pacify Jessie's sister. So Dickey spent the evening by the hammock. The next time he came it was the same, John sat with Jessie and he was banished to the porch and Belle. That young lady had framed an elaborate programme of reparation for the humiliation to which she had been subjected. He must bring her bonbons and flowers and sing to her in the summer moonlight to his mandolin. Dickey undertook these things in a spirit of penitence and martyrdom. Night after night he sat on the porch and strove to be amiable while mentally he was fuming against John. He sometimes wondered why nice girls like Jessie had to have small sisters.

During the second week of his enforced reparation he made a discovery. Belle had lengthened her dresses and twisted her braids into a knot on top of her small head, and with these personal changes there had come also a touch of coquetry to her manner that made her a most delightful companion. He found he was fretting less over John's advantages, but now and then the old jealous thought would come.

"Are you not almost placated?" he asked laughingly, one night.

Belle answered with spirit. "Do you think six boxes of chocolates and three bouquets would atone for all that laughter in the dress circle and those cat-calls from the gallery? No, indeed."

Dickey acknowledged that she was right, and went on playing the agreeable. And as he was as much philosopher as martyr he set himself to get all the pleasure possible out of his new role. It was really surprising how quickly time passed in Belle's presence. As she swung in the hammock with her lengthened skirts frou-frouing about her she made him tell her all about his home in his profession, and never doubted but that he would achieve his ambitions. Sometimes she talked of Jessie and wished, with a languishing glance into Dickey's eyes, that she were like her sister, "it would be so lovely to have a man like Dickey in love with her." He, looking close to find the coveted likeness, discovered she was very much more beautiful than Jessie, and wondered that he had never known it before.

After six weeks of this sort of thing Belle signed prettily and said she supposed he had spent quite enough time and money on her to salve her hurt, and that he had better resume his attentions to Jessie. Of course she would miss him, she added with drooping lids, but she trusted she was no usurer to claim more than her debt. Dickey went away with an odd sense of something lost tugging at this heart. The next evening he came, intending to go into the parlor and begin his rivalry with John; but somehow the lonely little figure in the hammock drew him aside, and he spent the evening as he had spent the preceding ones, in the moonlight.

"Good-by," he said at parting, "tomorrow I really must break into John's game and recover my lost ground."

She sighed, and then laughed so quickly that Dickey could scarcely separate the two. He stood confused for a moment, and when he recovered himself he found that he was still holding her hand and that she was watching him, shyly. He went away with his brain in a whirl; in his efforts to sooth her feelings had he made the child love him? Far into the night he sat smoking and thinking, and in the morning the queer feeling was still in his breast, and Blackstone lay open but unread before him all day. In the afternoon as he left his office there was a commotion at the nearest street corner, and a runaway horse dashed into view, dragging a dogcart in which sat two girls—Jessie and Belle. The quick turn about the corner sent the cart careening on one wheel, and almost as Dickey recognized the occupants they were spilled in the dust. With a cry Dickey rushed forward, and, passing one prostrate form, caught the other in his arms with words of solicitous endearment. But the figure drew resolutely away.

"This is not Jessie—this is——"

But Dickey not only held her the closer. "Not Jessie, but the girl I love, the only girl I have ever loved! Let John take care of Jessie. Are you hurt, dear?"

There as a contented sigh against his shoulder. "I haven't any pain now, not even in my heart, which has often ached at your indifference."

"John and Jessie are to be married in the winter," she told him later.

"I'm glad of it; we'll dance at their wedding," he laughed. "But, dear, I'm only a poor young lawyer, and——"

"And I'm ages too young to marry, so I'll wait a whole year for you, and if you give up smoking and send me only one box of chocolates a week you can save no end of money."

And so it was arranged, and when Miss Delaney next spoke of the lack of artistic finish to that theatrical performance, Dickey stoutly declared the "finish we othe finest on earth," and held to his point.

A Black Tragedy.

The woman with four children who had come through from Denver was nearing Detroit. The porter had finished brushing them, each one of whom had demanded attention every fifteen minutes, when the mother turned and said:

"You have been very attentive to us during this trip and I wish to reward you."

"Yess 'um."

"What is your name?" she asked as she took out a pencil and notebook.

"William White, mum."

She wrote for a minute on one of the leaves of her book, and then tore it out and handed it to him with the remark:

"A colored man who is ambitious to get along will always find friends."

A passenger caught him in the vestibule two minutes later and asked to see the paper. It read:

Mr. Pullman: Your man, William White, has been very attentive to me and my children, and I would recommend that you raise his salary and let him know that you fully appreciate his efforts. MRS. E. B.——.

It was read aloud to the porter and then the passenger looked at him. He turned a sort of gray and gasped for breath, and it was a long minute before he could ejaculate:

"Befo' de Lawd! but I dun thought dat was a fifteen-dollar check on some bank in Colorado. Huf Shoot! Wall, of all de deleterious, obnoxiousness I ebber did dun meet up wid in all my life, dis captivates de pinnacle!"—[Detroit Free Press.

Cold Tea, Milk or Lemonade.

Problem of Working Girl's Lunch is Solved

BY SPECIALLY-FITTED BOX OR BASKET

THE matter of her mid-day lunch is an ever present problem to the girl who works outside of her own home and on a small salary.

There are, of course, in all large cities inexpensive lunch rooms with respectable surroundings. But many of the young women attending business colleges and schools cannot afford even the moderate rates of the establishments.

Other toilers have a limited noon recess, which will not allow of their leaving the building in which they are employed, and therefore to them the dreaded lunch box is the only alternative.

Any physician will tell you that a wholesome and nutritious mid-day meal is an absolute necessity to the business woman, and that within the last ten years, since women have invaded so many branches of the business world, there has been a most alarming increase, in their sex, of nervous dyspepsia and all other ailments resulting from the lack of nutritious food.

There are many women who, rather than carry an uninviting lunch from home, become enthusiastic over a two-cent meal, but let me tell these foolish sisters that they may credit to this theory the splitting headache which comes so often in the afternoon, the failure to relish dinner, the dizzy head and sick stomach in the morning.

The putting up of a cold lunch is no simple matter as many a housewife has realised, and it is the wise mother who is ever on the alert to find some new and tempting viand.

The first consideration is of course the selection of the most nutritious food, but variety and daintiness of preparation are of almost equal importance.

When you consider that the lunch must stand several hours before being eaten you will readily understand that it is apt to prove anything but appetizing, especially if its contents have been hurriedly packed with the regulation sandwich of thick bread and chunks of meat, cake and pickle.

First, a word about the receptacle in which the lunch is to be packed.

There are numerous articles for this purpose, recently introduced and modeled on an up-to-date plan.

Among the best of them is the straw lunch basket with Japanese or American fittings.

The papier mache and adjustable tin trays are very convenient and if carefully cleansed with hot water every time will remain sweet and clean.

Another good idea is the lunch box outwardly resembling a camera, which is furnished inside with separate compartments for holding the different kinds of food, dishes and vials required for a wholesome lunch.

A generous amount of waxed paper should always be kept on hand, for there is nothing that will keep the several articles of food so fresh and prevent one from destroying the flavor of the others.

Small glasses, or cups, with tight-fitting covers are another necessity which should not be neglected in the household where a lunch-box must be prepared. For a custard or pudding these glasses are most essential.

Sandwiches are usually considered the staple article of the ordinary lunch-box, but there is a vast difference in sandwiches and, although many think it impossible, they can be made most tempting and palatable.

To be dainty, the bread must be cut thin, and if slices of brown is used, spread the bread lightly with butter; but when minced ham, veal or chicken is employed, melt a small portion of butter and mix with the other ingredients.

A small quantity of "made mustard" adds to the flavor of minced ham, while for chicken or veal finely chopped celery will be most appetising.

Chipped smoked beef makes a tasty sandwich which will often sharpen the most sluggish appetite, and bologna, which has been toasted over hot coals and lightly spread with French mustard, is also inviting.

Rye and brown bread may often be substituted for the customary white bread, and are both nutritious and wholesome.

A dainty filling for rye bread is Neufchatel cheese and chopped olives, softened with a little fresh cream and mixed to a smooth paste.

For a relish, olives are preferable to pickles, while celery and radishes make a pleasant addition to the cold lunch.

The appetising qualities of a deviled egg should be ample reward for the labor of preparation. Boil a fresh egg steadily for ten minute, then put into cold water until thoroughly cold. Peel off the shell, and cut in half. Remove the yolk and add a pinch of salt, a dash of pepper and a few drops of table oil or melted butter; mix all together, and if preferred a taste of mustard or curry powder may also be employed. Refill the whites with this mixture and wrap each half in waxed paper.

Minced ham, sardines and American cheese, grated, may also be added as fancied by the individual taste.

When baking pies for home use, remember to make several turn-overs or tarts for the lunch boxes; they are much more tempting in appearance than a piece of pie.

During the season when a variety of fresh fruit is unobtainable, a baked pie, stewed prunes, home-made jelly, marmalades and preserves may be securely packed in the little baskets, the same as the custard or pudding.

It is simply the little surprises or variety that make the cold lunch palatable from day to day, and the housekeeper who will bear this in mind, will find that she is not only giving pleasure to the business woman, but also helping her to retain that which is so essential to a successful career, good health.

MAKING THE BLOOD FLOW HEALTHFULLY

BY FIVE-MINUTE EXERCISES

By Mrs. Henry Symes

THE quality of beauty depends largely on the blood and the quality of the blood depends largely on the way it circulates through the body.

It is of the utmost importance, therefore, for girls who wish to be beautiful to learn just how to equalise this circulation, and just how to keep it steady, strong and free as it flows to the skin through the arteries and back from the heart through the whole body. Then it will bound along as it should, giving the glow of health, the fresh roses of beauty and the general "feel" of aliveness.

Simple exercises practised five minutes night and morning will help the whole circulation wonderfully and do much for the beauty which depends on it.

There are substitutes for dumbbell exercises which require no apparatus. The movements should be steady, swift and rhythmical. That the very same movements are taught to every beginner in every course of physical culture only shows the necessity of learning them if you do not know them or of practicing them if you have learned them already.

THE VARIOUS POSITIONS

FIRST POSITION—Let your arms fall down naturally in two straight lines from your shoulders and balance the weight of your body evenly upon your feet. This sounds simple enough, but many girls are decidedly awkward when taking the first position. An attempt to stand correctly when one is not accustomed to perfect poise shows how easy it is to unconsciously hitch one shoulder higher than the other, to let the head hang over ungracefully on one side, to bend one knee or to let the weight fall to one foot and to breach up the straight expanse of the chest. Practice the first position till you take it involuntarily whenever you are standing anywhere with empty hands.

SECOND POSITION—Extend the arms horizontally as far as you can stretch them, turning the palms of the hands alternately downward and upward with a swift and steady movement. This develops a free play of some of the very important muscles and sets the blood a-tingling along the lines which the movements of these muscles control. Keeping the arms well extended and the body well balanced, try to walk in this attitude about the floor on tiptoe. Muscles of the lower part of the body will thus be brought into exercise, while concentration of thought will of necessity be acquired through the effort to keep yourself from toppling over to the floor.

MERIT IN SIMPLICITY

THIRD POSITION—Raise the arms straight up from the shoulders and stand as high as you can on tiptoe, maintaining the position without tottering. Bring the feet down again to the level of the floor and stand perfectly erect. Then wave arms and hands to and fro through the air with a swift, strong, sidewise motion. Let the lines described by the movement be perfectly straight ones out from the shoulders, in toward the body, regular and rapid. Practice till perfect. If possible, watch your mirror while practicing. Correct any fault instantly.

FOURTH POSITION—Bring the arms back from the perpendicular to the horizontal position and repeat the exercise given for the third position.

FIFTH POSITION—Let the arms fall down again from the shoulders exactly as in the first position. Extend the arms out (not up) from the shoulders in two perfectly parallel lines. Then by a half-circular movement stretch them up and backward until the fingers touch the shoulder blades, then bring them forward to their starting lines again. This movement is excellent exercise for the muscles of the heart and chest and should be repeated at least five times.

These movements must not be disdained because they are simple. Strength lies in their simplicity. They are the fundamental exercises of all physical culture. Practiced regularly for five minutes, night and morning, they will result for you in a new feeling of vigor, and before long in improved looks.

Mirror That Makes It Possible to See All Parts of the Coiffure at Once

TO BE WELL arranged, the coiffure must be equally attractive from all points of view.

This is one of the difficulties of the coiffure dressed at home.

Every woman—at least every one of the great majority who are without a lady's maid—knows something of this problem.

It is a difficulty which could be readily overcome if the worker could but see herself on all sides at the same time.

As this is manifestly an impossibility, and as it is almost equally impossible to arrange one's toilet while holding a hand mirror, there are doubtless many women who will be glad to avail themselves of the benefits conferred by a small adjustable mirror, which can be attached to a corner of the dressing chair, thus enabling the occupant of the chair to see both the front and back of her head at the same time, while leaving both hands free for the task of arranging the coiffure.

A GOOD SUBSTITUTE

If this newly-invented mirror is not easily obtainable a very good substitute may be found in an ordinary hand mirror to which a metal rod and clamps have been attached.

Probably any silversmith or other expert metal worker could attach a contrivance of this sort to the frame of the mirror, and the latter could then be secured wherever it chanced to be needed, the clamps serving the purpose of fastening it in place.

Failing an aid of this kind, nothing is more useful than the familiar triplicate mirror, which, if hung in the proper position, enables the dresser to take a fairly comprehensive view of her personality from various points at the same time.

In placing even the ordinary dressing-room mirror it is of the utmost importance that it be put in a good light, for otherwise it might almost as well not be in use at all.

ARRANGING THE LIGHT

A mirror placed where the shadows can fall upon it is rather a hindrance than a help; for it serves to confuse the vision instead of assisting it; but neither must it be where the sunlight can fall directly upon it, for in that case not only will the dresser be unable to see with distinctness, but the mirror itself will speedily be ruined by the blurring of its surface.

The best results are obtained when the relative positions of the mirror and windows are such that the light from the latter falls upon the face of the dresser as she sits before the mirror, for by this means she is enabled to see with ease the minutest details of her toilet, and thus to correct whatever imperfections may appear.

Speaking of mirrors, it is the bounden duty of every woman to take one final look at her ensemble before leaving her dressing room, as much study being given to the effect in the back as to that in the front.

If this duty were more faithfully performed there would be fewer instances of gaping plackets, badly adjusted waistbands and untidy back hair to be seen in a single hour on the streets.

MRS. HENRY SYMES' HEALTH AND BEAUTY RECIPES FOR CORRESPONDENTS

HOW TO USE THE CAMEL'S HAIR FACE SCRUBBING BRUSH.

Immerse the brush in water as hot as can be pleasantly borne. Soap it well, as much as you would if you were about to use it for your hands. Then they face thoroughly, taking especial care of the places that most require cleansing. Rinse the face with cooler clean water, so as to cut all the soap out of the pores. Dry carefully, and apply a portion of toilet balsam; any good emollient will answer.

My hair is growing far down on the side of my face. Will you inform me through what how to stop it? How to keep skin from growing on top finger nail; also how to keep hands nice?

Train your hair to grow by brushing it daily in that direction. If you scrub your face use the "camel's-hair face brush, and I think the growth will disappear. If it does not, you will have to use a depilatory.

If you take care of your hands, washing them frequently and pressing the skin down around the nails, the habit will soon form, and you will not be troubled as you describe.

I give you an ointment to use on your hands at night.

CARE OF THE NAILS.

To keep the nails in good condition they should be manicured twice a week, and once a week, after washing the hands, the thin membrane at their base should be gently pushed back with the ivory presser, and the nails polished with the chamois leather rubber. If a good nail emollient be used daily, the nails will grow and grow, even when I brush it twice a day. Would washing it injure it, for I have been told it makes it look unnatural afterward? One friend of my family died of brain fever, which the doctors said was caused by the brushing of the top of the head. He said that Indians never had brain fever because they never brush the scalp of their head. I have wanted to ask you if you do not brush my hair, for it is not anything I have done that caused it, as I never did have hair; not till I was quite a child, and was growing out I was so mortified the way it looks now that I will resign to do anything you say I do not do.

Will take this with a great kindness of you, and if it is not too much trouble I would like to know some way to darken the color of my eyes darker. They are blue, but lighter that is becoming to my face. I have read that stage accesse put something on the outside that makes the eyes look darker. Would you tell me what it is? E. J. A.

I like to be deferential to physicians, but I think your doctor could not have been serious when he told you that brain fever was produced by wetting the top of the head.

As to the Indians and their immunity from brain fever, it certainly cannot be because they do not wet their heads, for the Indians are by the most persistent swimmers and divers.

It is just as essential to keep the head clean and well ventilated as it is to bathe any other part of the body. The hair must be kept clean to thrive. Try to shampoo it at least once a week, and you should have it massaged every day for the next two or three months.

If you cannot get any one to do this for you you can give yourself a treatment. You can perform a very satisfactory substitute on your own head. Press the fingers firmly into the skin of the scalp, beginning at the temples and making a little wheel-like movement from front to back of the head and covering every part of the skull. Then make an up-and-down shuttle-like movement. Repeat this until you have been constantly at work on the scalp for twenty-five minutes or half an hour. You will very soon notice a great difference and the hair will cease falling out. Use the tonic for which I give you formula, taking especial care of the places that most require cleansing. Rinse the face with cooler clean water, so as to cut all the soap out of the pores. Dry carefully, and apply a portion of toilet balsam; any good emollient will answer.

ITS FOUR-FOLD FUNCTIONS.

NEW YORK CHAMBER OF COMMERCE STANDS FOR FINANCIAL CENTER—NEW BUILDING MOST SUMPTUOUS INTERIORLY IN MANHATTAN—MEMBERSHIP UNIVERSAL.

BY SERENO S. PRATT.

THE Chamber of Commerce is not commonly included in the mechanism of Wall street. It is not a money-making institution. No goods are displayed for sale there. No goods are shipped for sale there. No contracts take place within its walls. It contains no market. Yet no other institution in the United States has so wealthy a membership and no other organization of business men exerts a larger influence.

The Chamber of Commerce is an association of merchants and bankers formed for the purpose of promoting the commerce of the city and the country. This it does simply through the action of its officers and committees, and by intelligent discussion at its monthly meetings. So representative of the trade and industries of the country is its membership that when it takes a position in regard to a public question having a vital relation to business it is apt to make itself felt throughout the United States.

HISTORIC COLONIAL TAVERN.

The Chamber of Commerce is one of the oldest associations in the United States. Its original charter was obtained from George III of England. It is indeed, much older than the New York Chamber of Commerce. It was organized on the 5th of April, 1768, in a building still standing at the corner of Broad and Pearl streets. Originally the residence of a member of the Livingston family, this building later became a famous colonial tavern kept by Samuel Fraunces, and it is still known as "The Fraunces Tavern." It was there the Waldorf-Astoria of that day, and during the revolution it was the scene of many a stirring and important gathering. At the close of the war it was in the long room of this house, on its second floor, that Washington took his famous farewell of the officers who had supported him through the memorable struggle, and to whom he also said good-by with "a heart full of love and affection." It is possible in that same room today to obtain a satisfying lunch (though not sumptuous meal). Some of the historical associations and moderateness of the charges, made for the modesty of the re-

MAGNIFICENT NEW BUILDING.

From 1768 to 1903, and from this historic if far from splendid building, to the palatial structure, which the Chamber of Commerce dedicated a few days ago, is a far reach. It covers the whole period of our history as an independent country. In the development of the nation, especially on the side of its industries and commerce, the Chamber of Commerce has taken a significant part. Interesting as its history has been, it is more important germane to the object of this series of articles, to tell what the chamber is today. But first a word or two about its new building. It is, in a measure symbolic of the mechanism of Wall street, speaking now of Wall street, as a center of speculation but a center of finance. It is one of the magnificent buildings in the Wall-street district, a fit companion of the Sub-Treasury and the stock exchange, and them, not constructed for banking purposes. It cost more than a million dollars, and the entire sum was contributed by its wealthy members. The chamber occupies the whole building except the ground floor, which is leased by a trust company. Finely its decoration and furnishings make it the most sumptuous building in New York.

PORTRAIT GALLERY.

The assembly hall, where the monthly and special meetings are held, is a magnificent apartment, with lofty ceilings, the walls being covered by portraits all done by many of the most celebrated artists. It is an apartment that would be worthy of a Senate or a court of last resort. The latter has more than two hundred members, and is constantly adding to its number. This gallery of paintings is already priceless, both as works of art, and as preserving to the generations the features of many of the most famous men of business of the past and of today. It has been the special labor of love of the veteran secretary of the chamber, George Wilson, constantly to enlarge this collection of portraits. The most valuable painting is a life-sized portrait of Alexander Hamilton painted from life. The building also contains large committee-rooms, and the top floor is given up to a fine library in which tables are placed, on which luncheon is served after every meeting of the chamber. A well-appointed kitchen adjoins the library.

FUNCTIONS OF CHAMBER.

The work of the chamber is entirely of a public character, and is four-fold, viz., social, philanthropic, political and commercial. Its social duties consist, first, of its big annual dinner, held usually in November, and which corresponds to the Lord Mayor's banquet in official or semi-official statement of policy by some high official of the nation, State or city. No other banquet in New York brings together in one room so many of the captains of industry and the representative men of business as this. Then the chamber gives receptions to distinguished foreigners, and always serves the social lunch for its members after its meetings. When its new building was dedicated last November there was a gathering present of extraordinary brilliancy, including the President and ex-President of the United States, several foreign ambassadors, a Prince of the German empire, and many other representatives of foreign governments and commerce, as well as the flower of American commercial life. The company at the dinner in the evening was scarcely less distinguished.

The philanthropic work of the chamber has been one of its notable features. At the time of the Chicago fire it raised a million dollars for the sufferers, and in every great calamity that strikes any part of the country, the chamber always takes a leading part in raising money and supplies for the relief of those afflicted. The business men of New York make it their vehicle for this kind of philanthropy.

The political work of the chamber is necessarily limited, as being composed of men of both the great political parties, it is necessarily nonpartisan. But there are some political subjects upon which men of both parties can sometimes act in unison. The chamber has taken a leading part in the cause of municipal reform, and was chiefly instrumental in starting the committee of seventy movements of 1874 and 1894. It was also active in the more recent national campaign in behalf of the gold standard.

But naturally the chamber devotes most of its energies to commerce and finance. That is its field. All questions relating to currency and banking, to tariffs and taxation, to shipping and terminal facilities and to foreign relations, so far as they relate to the extension of the markets, come before the chamber in one form or another; and the reports of its committees, as well as the action of its monthly meetings, are often influential in determining the course of legislation.

DISTINGUISHED MEMBERSHIP.

The amount of influence it exerts is dependent entirely upon the character of its membership and the soundness of the position it takes upon public matters. Its membership, as has already been indicated, is probably the most distinguished body of men in America. Its 1500 members include nearly every great leader in the business of the country. Moreover, it is the present policy of the chamber to make its membership truly national. So, while it is composed of the Vanderbilts, the Astors, the Morgans, the Rockefellers, the Goulds, the Schiffs and the Cladins of New York, it is also taking in many of the big men of other cities, like Marshall Field of Chicago, ex-Gov. Francis of St. Louis, and A. J. Cassatt, George F. Baer, C. A. Griscom and John Wanamaker of Philadelphia. Its president, who is now Morris K. Jessup, a retired banker, noted for his liberal interest in religious and philanthropic matters, is by virtue of his office president of the Sailors' Snug Harbor and member of the Rapid Transit Commission. The latter is practically a creation of the chamber, which from the start has been an active supporter of the movement for underground rapid transit.

This sketch of the Chamber of Commerce is sufficient to afford an idea of the place which it occupies in the mechanism of the financial center. It is, in brief, an effective agent of the merchants and bankers of New York for the securing of such legislation as they believe is needed for the business interests of the city and the country. It is creditable to the public spirit of these bankers and merchants that so much of the work of the chamber is of a disinterested character, and that as a rule, its action on public matters is patriotic and wise.

WALL STREET'S VOICE.

The Chamber is Wall street in legislation. It is the voice of the financial center. Is there a bill pending at Albany striking at one of the vital interests of the city? The chamber will take steps to kill it. Is there an aldermanic hold-up of some important project of municipal expansion, as, for instance, the Pennsylvania Railroad's great scheme for Manhattan terminals and North and East River tunnels? The chamber will voice the protest of the business men. Is Congress about to pass some act that would be detrimental to commerce? The influence of the chamber will be felt at Washington. But its work is not merely negative. It is also affirmative, and the chamber suggests much constructive legislation.

The best illustration of how the Chamber of Commerce is utilized by the leaders in banking and business to work out their ideas of public action is afforded by the initiative taken by the chamber in the matter of financial legislation now so prominent before the country.

It has been said that no business man, however farsighted, can see more than a year ahead, and he sees dimly at that. For years certain students of economics have been agitating for a reform of the currency, but it was not until last fall that the practical men of business began to realize that the subject was one that concerned intimately the stability of the financial situation. Looking ahead, they say that unless something was done the continuance of our national prosperity might be threatened. Looking into the subject, however, their ideas of what should be done separated. Some inclined to the side of asset currency. Others believed that the required elasticity could be obtained without changing the principle of bond security for circulating notes, that the scope of our banking system could be so widened as to permit of the acceptance of railroad bonds, first as security for government deposits in the banks, and ultimately, no doubt, for banknote circulation. But divided as they were as to what should be done, they were all agreed that something must be done. The sharp money stringency of last fall quickened their perceptions of the seriousness of the need, not so much of more money—for there has been a large increase in the circulation per capita—but of more elasticity in the supply, so that when the crops are being moved, for instance, there will be sufficient for that necessity without causing an upheaval in the money market.

SEEKING CURRENCY REFORM.

At a meeting of the chamber last November Jacob H. Schiff arose, and, referring to the money stringency, asked that the Committee on Finance and Currency be instructed to make a report in regard to measures of relief. Now when Mr. Schiff says anything the whole financial world listens. He is one of the two greatest bankers of Wall street, and one of the dozen greatest financiers of the world. It is needless to say that his motion was carried. So the machinery was set in order which resulted in the present agitation for financial reform legislation. The committee of the chamber that took the matter in hand was composed of J. Harsen Rhoades, G. G. Williams (since deceased,) Jacob H. Schiff, ex-Secretary Fairchild, ex-Secretary Gage, W. A. Nash and A. Julliard. Here was a combination of financial talent and experience that it would be difficult anywhere else to bring together in one committee. It is not surprising therefore that their report has since formed the basis of various bills for financial reform. This shows as nothing else could what a force the chamber forms in the mechanism of Wall street. It is an important part, and the results of its work are felt everywhere.

RECENT NEW BUILDING OF THE NEW YORK CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, ERECTED AT A COST EXCEEDING A MILLION DOLLARS AND DEDICATED LAST NOVEMBER. INTERNALLY THE MOST SUMPTUOUS BUILDING IN NEW YORK.

Good Resolutions.

Extracts from the diary of George Washington Throggins:

Aug. 1.—Have become convinced that I am smoking too much, and have decided to quit it at once and for good. As a sort of object lesson to keep before my mind the extravagance of which I have been guilty in the indulgence of the foolish habit, I have adopted this rule:

Whenever I have an inclination to smoke a cigar I shall drop into a small pasteboard box the sum of money it would take to buy the cigar. I shall deposit this money in bank from time to time and watch it grow.

Aug. 2.—Pretty, tough, but I'm sticking to it. Wanted a 10-cent cigar the first thing this morning. Put a dime in the pasteboard box. Felt the same inclination twice during the forenoon. Two more dimes. Wanted to smoke three times in the afternoon. Sixty cents in the box.

Aug. 3.—Decided it would be a good thing to taper off on my inclinations a little. Wanted to smoke three times this morning. Dropped a quarter in the box. Same thing in the afternoon. Another quarter. Got $1.10 saved now.

Aug. 4.—Thought I might as well come down to nickel cigars. Getting rich too fast. All my hankerings today were resolutely scaled down to five-centers. Saved 40 cents. Got $1.50 now. When it gets to be $10 I shall deposit it in bank.

Aug. 5.—Smoked a still cheaper grade today—in my mind. Eight for a quarter. Put 25 cents in the box.

Aug. 6.—Had a strong inclination this morning for a 25-cent cigar. Decided to humor it to the extent of adding 25 cents to the collection. Cheap smokes are demoralizing. Humored it some more. Added $1.50 to the sum on hand, making $3.25 in all. This is too reckless. Must economize.

Aug. 7.—Smoke—constructively—nothing but stogies today. Three for a nickel. Too cheap. Left a bad taste in my mind. All I put away today was 10 cents.

Aug. 8.—Went back to the three-for-a-quarter kind. Added half a dollar to the treasury.

Aug. 9.—Had a strong desire for a 50-center today. Gratified it—in the same way. Felt that I could have smoked a coffin nail. Punished myself by going out and contributing a quarter to the fresh-air fund.

Aug. 10.—Got reckless again today and indulged in wild imaginings of unlimited stories. Dropped 65 cents in the box. Have $5 now.

Aug. 11.—Took the $5 and went out and bought a box of Perfectos.—[Chicago Tribune.

Firemen and Live Wires.

Heincke, in the Electrische Zeitschrift, gives a description of experiments made to ascertain whether there is any danger, and if so how much, of firemen being exposed to shocks by the stream of water which is thrown from the hose striking against a live wire. The author experimented with ordinary hydrant water, which in his case was not a very good conductor, and also with water to which was added 0.5 per cent. of soda to make it conduct better. The copper nozzle of the hose was very well insulated from earth and the potential of the stream of water against the earth was measured with precision voltmeters. From these potentials he calculated the current strength, based upon the resistance of the human body of 15,000 ohms, as ascertained by Prof. Weber in Zurich.

Experiments were conducted with triphase current of 6000 volts and 125 volts, and direct current of 240 volts and 550 volts with both kinds of water mentioned above. The experiments with triphase current were conducted with star connection, 6000 volts between two lines, the neutral wire being earthed. The places where the stream of water struck the wires had been previously bared. It was shown that with ordinary water a length of the stream of 800 mm. is sufficient to render the effects of the electric current on the body harmless, while with 0.05 per cent. soda in the water the minimum length is 1000 mm. It is to be remarked, however, that disagreeable sensations still show themselves in the body of the person under consideration.

With 550 volts direct current and pure hydrant water a dangerous potential was also not obtained, but with the good conducting water it showed itself at a distance of 80 mm. It is shown by these tables that the danger resulting from the playing of water on current-conducting wires is not by far so great as had previously been thought and feared, especially if it is considered that perhaps only in the rarest cases will wires which carry a potential of three times 6000 volts come into consideration.—[Electrical World and Engineer.

A Greek Ke-Ke Wanted.

A curious incident has occurred to prevent the execution of half a dozen prisoners who have been now in expectation for many years of capital punishment at the prison of Palamidi Fort, at Nauplia.

No one seemed to have any special desire to proceed with the sentence, and the delay met with no protest from the prisoners.

The Minister of Justice issued an order the other day to the authority of Nauplia ordering them to carry out at once the decision of the Criminal Courts providing for the execution of six prisoners.

Everything was ready, and the people of Nauplia with justifiable emotion were waiting to witness the event, when early on the morning of the appointed day the executioneer, one Bekiaris, died from heart disease. The execution, therefore, was postponed till the appointment of the new executioner. But it is the time-honored custom to appoint an executioner from the ranks of those condemned to death, and up to the present all six condemned men decline the office, pleading humanitarian reasons. They were willing to be executed, if it were considered necessary, but no single one had the heart to kill his comrades.

The perplexity, therefore, of the authorities is great. They wish to apply the law, but can find no means of doing so.

Curiously enough, a volunteer has come forward in the shape of a French non-commissioned officer, but popular as well as official feeling in Nauplia is against employing a foreigner to cut off Greek heads.—[Athens correspondence London Leader.

SPRING STREET!!!

NEAR FOURTH!!!

60x130 TO ALLEY, AND NEAR FOURTH!!

Frank L. Stanton, through his philosophic Brother Dickey, says that "De worl' is er field er trouble, en I got 10 acres en can't sell out!"

My! My! 'Spose Frank had bought his 10 acres on SPRING ST., NEAR FOURTH!!

If he had only done that he would now be able to buy—a pound and a half of radium—and pay more than half cash.

But speaking of his not being able to give away his land—well, since I come to think about it, it is sometimes hard to give away even Spring st. I have had some experience in that line in the past 10 years and am still having some. I had to almost force one man to take a piece down there—almost gave it away, too—but it is now worth more than three times the little change I asked him to leave me for it. I also persuaded two other fellows to let me (almost) give them pieces and now they are not worrying about it, to say the least. And here I am today almost giving away 60 feet near the 12-story building corner of Fourth, and find it a little hard to do—but you'll see that I will do so, and in a short while, too. I feel inclined to get gay and say that you don't call "$3333.33 per foot" "giving it away," do you? Well, now you needn't think too fast nor incline too fast—for you inclined that way when I sold at $1350 per foot, and now you'd "stand in line" and shout till you're blue in the face to get to buy it at twice the old price, and in five years from now you'll be better able to pass judgment on today's prices of SPRING, NEAR FOURTH!!

It's the best!! So don't be afraid of it at the price! If you haven't all the price don't worry! See me! I'll sell it to you for less than half cash, balance 6% per cent. net. No discount for all cash, though.

This location is today ripe for 12 to 15-story buildings for best tenants, at highest rents, for long terms. You only lose by delay. Spring st. goes up, up, up!

INVEST TEN DOLLARS—

And then $10 monthly for four months and you will own $50 shares of the stock of the Anna Barbara Mining Company. This stock will undoubtedly be worth $250 within one year and you will receive back the amount of your investment in dividends in a short time.

This company is capitalized for 1,000,000 shares of the par value of 10 each. Over one-third of the stock still remains in the treasury. There is no preferred stock and no bonded indebtedness and all the stockholders share equally. Stock is owned by Los Angeles people. Many expert miners after visiting the property and examining it, have come back and invested in this stock.

The property of the Anna Barbara Mining Company lies eight miles southeast of the town of Ballarat, in the Panimint Range, Inyo county, Cal., one of the most highly-mineralized sections of the State. The property is equipped with a first-class stamp mill of a capacity of 40 tons per day, two 65-H.P. boilers, and one 100-H.P. Corliss engine. This equipment (costing over $25,000) is all paid for and installed. The company owns all of its property free from debt, except current expenses. The present development shows thousands and thousands of tons of ore-carrying values in gold of more than $5 per ton. It is a low-grade, free-milling ore, that can be mined and milled at $1.50 per ton.

The management is honest and conservative. The directors and promoters have put their own money into it. The vice-president is on the property, personally directing the work and working himself without any salary. THE MINERS THEMSELVES ARE BUYING THE STOCK. Only a small amount to be sold at this price for it is WORTH more.

This is your opportunity to own a share in a gold mine and you can pay for it on easy monthly payments, 200 shares will cost you only $20, payable $1 per month.

Call or write for free particulars.

PERSONS OF BOTH LARGE AND SMALL capital seeking a remunerative opportunity please consider this proposition. The advertiser being recently from the East, and with some capital, realizes the necessity of large capital to produce paying results, and suggests that others in a similar position combine with him in the organization of a company for the development of meritorious enterprises. It is easily seen that Los Angeles offers an exceptional opportunity along this line, and as the writer has been successful in promoting enterprises in other cities, he feels that with the assistance of others a business of unlimited possibilities can be established. Persons desirous of considering this matter further address immediately, W. box 95, TIMES OFFICE.

OUR PROUDEST BOAST.

SOME one has asserted that "the greatest modern poem of humanity is the Constitution of the United States." Regarded as such, it is the great epic of human freedom, its tones resonant with hope and promise. Its promulgation marked a new era in the hopes of the race, and the doors of human captivity and bondage swung backward to let in the light of the new day upon the world.

Since the adoption of the Constitution of the United States the world has made marvelous advance in enlightenment and progress. The social and educational aspect of the country bears today scarcely a resemblance to its condition at that period of its early history. Under that Constitution there has been a great broadening of the idea of liberty. We have grasped the idea, as a nation, that liberty means perfect freedom of action under law. That law is necessary to liberty, and that there is a vast difference between lawlessness and freedom. We are treading far higher levels today than we were a hundred years ago. We are conscious of vaster possibilities. Life has reached out in numberless new directions; has unfolded to nobler ideas till there is scarcely a limit to its scope. We have, with the Constitution as the foundation, been building upward till in all the history of the race no such structure for human happiness was ever before reared.

But the work which we have to do now is to guard that structure, and to protect it from the various causes which threaten its destruction. We cannot sit supinely down, content with the work that we have accomplished, and feel that freedom is secure without further vigilance on our part. It was never truer in the world's history than it is today, that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

A sense of the value and dignity of citizenship should be cultivated. A better knowledge of public affairs should be taught to the rising generation, together with the principles upon which the government is based. A higher reverence for law should also be instilled into the public mind, and a greater pride in the achievements of our past. In this way a deeper love of country may be fostered, and the time may come when the proudest boast of men may be, "I am an American citizen."

The American idea is the idea that it is to conquer the world for freedom. It is working like leaven among the Old World kingdoms. It is lessening the tyranny of thrones, and is gradually weakening the shackles of the enslaved everywhere. If we are true to ourselves, to the principles which underlie our constitutional rights and liberties, we shall yet conquer the world for freedom. Ours will be a bloodless victory, a triumph, not by the force of arms, but by the might and power of undying principles. And of all victories, such are the most enduring, and the grandest in their result to the race.

WE RECKON.

ONE of our prominent clergymen who has just returned from a visit to the East, comes back with a heart filled with rejoicing pride in Los Angeles. "In no other city of its size in the country," says he, "can be found as many churches as in Los Angeles, and nowhere is church attendance so large in proportion to the population as it is here in this city."

This speaks well for the character of our people, for it will be universally admitted that a church-going people is a law-abiding people, and a people who will care not only for the spiritual but the moral and educational needs of the community. Say what we may, every true American recognizes the fact that the great underlying element of strength in our government is Christianity, and that the community or city that is most largely controlled by enlightened and consistent Christian sentiment offers the best inducements to the homeseeker, to the parent with a growing family, whom he would train up into intelligent citizenship, and to a high moral manhood and womanhood. And this is what we have to offer to the parents and citizens who, weary of the climatic ills and hardships of an ever-changing eastern climate, are considering the feasibility of making a home here.

The East has dealt well with Los Angeles, for she has sent us a generous influx of her best culture, of her wealth and her Christian sentiment, until Los Angeles is really an eastern city, as far as its population goes, transplanted into a land of sunshine and beauty, where all the best that there is in man may be nourished and strengthened under the most favorable conditions that exist.

Then let our loyal-hearted eastern friends not hesitate to come to us, for we can give them the best that the country offers. They will not miss the noblest institutions of the Puritan East, for they have taken root and are flourishing here. The church, the public school, the college and the university, and all that goes to make up modern, progressive, Christian civilization are here, and they are beckoning the homeseeker and the traveler to come.

REMARKS BY MEN OF THE TIMES.

It is stated that the King of England spends $3600 for perfume a year. A people must certainly set a great store upon a monarchical form of government if they are willing to pay such a price for it.

The man who says "I have stopped your paper" still bobs up occasionally. He means, of course, that he has stopped his copy of the paper—which, it is scarcely necessary to say, is quite a different thing.

An eastern paper suggests that King Edward will not have completed the pacification of Ireland until he has made a friendly visit to New York City. We hadn't thought of it, but the editor is probably right.

Mme. Mary Anderson de Navarro is to receive $225,000 for a series of 150 readings in the United States. This is at the rate of $1500 per reading—which is fairly good pay, even for Mme. Mary Anderson Navarro.

The great European powers, it is reported, have in contemplation a plan of restoring peace and order in the Balkans by ending "the union between the Turk and his Christian subjects of Aryan race." The time for intervention of some sort, to put a stop to the atrocities of Turkish misrule in Macedonia and other provinces of Turkey, appears to be about ripe. The "Sick Man of the East" seems to be growing rapidly worse instead of better. His malady is of long standing, and nothing short of a drastic dose of medicine will help him.

Aguinaldo, the Filipino ex-leader, is now a strong supporter of the American régime in the Philippine Islands. He recently addressed a letter of advice to his countrymen, in which he urged them to forsake gambling, adopt improved methods of agriculture, and to attend the public schools as much as possible. This is better than advising the Filipinos to keep up a hopeless and needless struggle, which was inflicting far more injury upon themselves than upon the Americans. It is to be hoped that Aguinaldo's change of heart will be permanent.

A newspaper paragraph to the effect that the White Star steamship Britannic has just sailed from Belfast to Bremen, to be broken up, suggests how rapidly the development of the trans-Atlantic steamship service goes on. When the Britannic, and her sister ship, the Germanic, were put on the trans-Atlantic route, about twenty-nine years ago, it was not believed that for many years anything superior in the line of steamships would be seen. Yet it was only a few years before they were entirely outclassed. Doubtless, twenty years from now, our present trans-Atlantic greyhounds will be looked upon as slow old tugs.

A Kansas woman was arrested in an Eastern city for calling the Chief of Police "a grunting hog; a filthy, beefy, porky, two-legged animal." A prize for the first correct guess who she was.—[Denver Post.

Bits of Verse.

YOSEMITE.

Here Nature holds herself in regnant state,
And sits a queen with mountains for her crown.
Her robes are royal, jeweled with bright flowers,
Her crystal waterfalls look as they leaped
From the far heavens with bright rainbows wreathed
About their feet and on their foreheads front,
When the sun kisses their face and pours on Them a baptism of light, glorious
In beauty. The Valley's granite walls rise,
Like a rocky firmament, thousands of Feet above its emerald floor, and the Tall pines and cedars, growing on their crests,
Seem to brush the skies and lay their fingers
On the stars. The anthem of its mighty
Waters fills all the centuries with its Unceasing harmony, thundering of Power. Here we see Omnipotence has Chiseled vastness, shaping the rocks into Glorious cathedral heights on which the Sun lays his first morning beams, and his last
Kiss at evening. They front th' mighty distances,
And look afar through space, while their high crests
Are lift above the clouds. Kindred are they
With bending skies and circl'ing planets, and
The rolling thunders pour their voice into
Their ears in tones that shake the very stars.
How rise the mighty cedars on their sides,
Like columns to uphold the far, star-fraught
Firmament, monarchs of trees, great giant
Titans, baffling the winds with their unbending Majesty. Yosemite! No words can Paint its wonders. It is a thought of God,
So marvelous that human speech feels its Own feebleness, its great poverty of
Utterance, and is still with rev'rent awe.

ELIZA A. OTIS.

August 30, 1903.

Sunt Geminae Somni Portae.

She was so beautiful I could but follow;
Her words seemed truth itself, I could not doubt,
And so she led me out beyond the hollow
Half-hearted living of the world about.

Steep through the upward path, without misgiving,
I followed as she led, and more and more
She grew to seem the guide to that true living
That I had set my life to looking for.

Footsore I grew and faint, through never nearing
The goal, yet hopeful ever of the prize—
When suddenly, athwart my path appearing,
I saw a distant gleaming barrier rise—

A sheer white wall, pierced by a single gateway,
Guarding twin doors of ivory finely cut,
Twin doors that as I neared them opened straight
And passed my leader through and swiftly shut.

But when I came and stood beside them knocking
And strove to move the strong-joined silent bars,
Forth came a voice in sadness half, half mocking:
"Thou fool, go back, this is the gate of dreams."

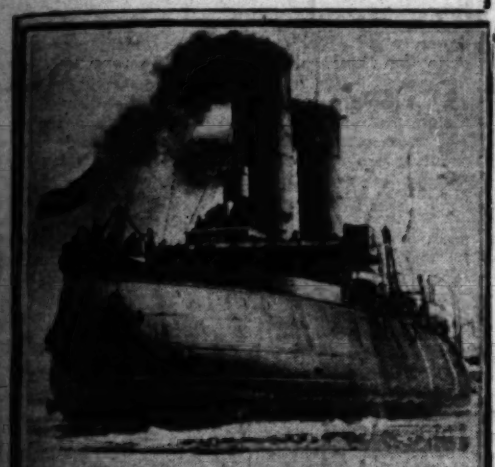
RUSSIA'S NAVY.

HOW THE CZAR AND THE MIKADO ARE PREPARING TO FIGHT.

From Our Own Correspondent.

THE prospect of a war with Japan calls attention to the enormous increase going on in the navy of Russia. I see Russian men-of-war everywhere. I found several new ones building in the Vulcan shipyards at Stettin, Germany; and others have been constructed at Kiel by the Krupps, and there are a large number under way in the shipyards of Russia. This country has now one of the largest navies of the world, and it has a vast number of mercantile vessels which can be brought into use in time of war.

The Czar has six great battleships, with an aggregate tonnage of more than 70,000. He has three armored cruisers aggregating more than 35,000 tons, and ten cruisers of about 50,000 tons. In addition there are twenty destroyers, fourteen torpedo gunboats and fifteen torpedo boats, either built or building. For the past ten years Russia has been steadily adding to her navy, and has had ships constructed for her in the United States, England, Germany and Denmark, in addition to those made at home. She has a big fleet here on the Baltic guarding St. Petersburg and other ports. There is another fleet in the Black Sea, and the Mediterranean, and another in the Far East, protecting Manchuria and eastern Siberia.



The "Ermak" Russia's great ice breaker

A Visit to Kronstadt.

I took the steamer at Nicolas bridge the other day, and went out to Kronstadt, the little island at the mouth of the Neva, which guards the entrance to the Russian capital. When Peter the Great built St. Petersburg, he said that he wanted it as a window through which he could look out upon Europe. Kronstadt is the steel bars of that window. It is only twenty miles away, and is reached by a sea canal sixteen miles long, and more than twenty feet deep. This leads into the Gulf of Finland, and it ends only a short distance from Kronstadt.

In coming to St. Petersburg you must pass Kronstadt, and as you do so you make your way in and out through islands covered with forts. There are about a half-dozen such island forts, in addition to Kronstadt itself. They rise from the sea looking like mighty floating batteries, and effectually protect this gate to the great Russian empire.

Kronstadt itself is low. It is walled in from the sea, and as you look at it you can see a forest of masts back of the walls, and among them the smokestacks of steamers, out of many of which the black smoke is pouring.

The war harbor is at the southeast end of the island. There were five great boats inside it during my visit. Near this is the middle harbor, in which all sorts of naval repairs are made, and not far away are the admiralty buildings, an arsenal, the naval school and a great marine hospital.

The fortifications are very powerful, and the island altogether contains some of the strongest forts of the world. There is quite a city upon it, with something like 60,000 people. It has two divisions, one devoted to the navy, and the other to mercantile interests.

During my stay I saw many of the naval officers and men. The sailors are fine-looking fellows, big framed, broad shouldered and as a general thing bearded. They are said to be the equals of any other nation as to seamanship, and they are as brave as the Cossacks and other Russian soldiers on land.

The Czar is fond of the navy. He frequently comes to Kronstadt to look over the fortifications, and not long ago he and the Czarina held there a review of the marines.

If a war should arise between Russia and Japan, all the Czar's shipping in Chinese waters will be pressed into service. There are many ships in the volunteer fleet which can be used as transports or cruisers. These ships are about fifteen in number, and are now running between Odessa, Vladivostok and Port Arthur. They carry troops, provisions and emigrants by the thousands. I understand that Russia is quietly planting colonies along the Chinese Eastern Railroad, and that she will eventually Russianize Manchuria. These colonies will also do effective work in time of war supplying provisions and perhaps men.

Russia's Great Ice Breakers.

In addition to her merchant vessels and men-of-war, Russia has now some of the most effective ice-breaking steamers of the world. She has enormous floating machines run by steam which will crush the ice of the harbors and force their way into almost any port. Kronstadt is kept open during the winter by such ice breakers, and they will also be of great value at Valdivostok and other Siberian ports.

The largest of these vessels is the Ermak, built in 1898 at Newcastle-on-Tyne. It is like a huge man-of-war, being as long as the average city block, as wide as the ordinary city street, and of a depth as great as that of a four-story house. It has a draft of twenty-five feet, and a displacement of 8000 tons. Its machinery is operated by engines furnishing 10,000 horse power, and when it pushes against ice with this enormous force the ice has to be indeed thick to resist it. The Ermak is so shaped at the stern that another vessel can be lashed to it, so that it will have the assistance and additional power of the vessel behind. It has forty-eight water-tight compartments, the larger of which have engines and boiler-rooms, the capacity of each boiler-room being 2000 tons.

Two Hundred Miles Through Solid Ice.

The Ermak has been severely tested. In 1899 it made a journey of 200 miles through solid ice, all of it being at least five feet thick, and fifty miles of it about ten feet in thickness. In plowing through this it hurled the ice aside as a locomotive plow throws snow, cutting its way right into the harbor of Kronstadt.

Such ice breakers will make Vladivostok an open port during the winter, furnishing a new outlet for war supplies via the trans-Siberian road. There are ice breakers on Lake Baikal, which keep the trans-Siberian road open, although in case of trouble tracks can be laid on the ice, and communication thus be kept up. With Lake Baikal open it is now only seventeen or eighteen days from Moscow to Port Arthur, where the harbor is free from ice the year round, and where ships drawing thirty feet can enter without difficulty.

The Russians have built up a great naval station at Port Arthur. This is only a few miles from Dalny, the commercial port at the end of the trans-Siberian road. They have an enormous amount of naval supplies there, and they are, I am told, now ready for war if Japan is anxious to fight.

The Japanese Navy.

The navy of Japan is a greater wonder than that of Russia. The Russians have had a navy since the days of Peter the Great. The Japanese navy has been built up within the present generation. During our Civil War the Japanese knew nothing of naval affairs outside their war junks, and for ten years thereafter they had no merchant vessels to speak of. When they fought the Chinese in 1894 their navy consisted of sixteen steel men-of-war, seventeen gunboats of wood and steel, and about twenty-six torpedo boats. They had good guns, and they fired them well. They showed that they knew how to shoot, and proved themselves the equals of any naval troops upon earth. The story of that war was much the same as that of our war with Spain. The Japanese gained their victory by courage and skill rather than by better ships or better guns. They destroyed the heavier vessels of their enemy, and practically annihilated the Chinese as a sea power.

At the close of the war the Japanese took the money they received from China and put it into new battleships, cruisers and gunboats. They bought new arms, and have been adding to their navy from that day to this. During the present year they will spend about $10,000,000 for warships and war material, and they have spent about a hundred million since the close of their war with China. In addition to this, they have set aside another hundred million dollars to be spent in the future. This vast sum is to be spread over eleven years, beginning

As a result of such expenditures the Japanese navy is now one of the best of the world, and in some respects it is already stronger than that of Russia.

In the Japanese Shipyards.

During my last visit to Japan, about two years ago, I visited some of the new shipbuilding yards. The Japanese are now making their own protected cruisers and destroyers, and are founding armor factories, with which they will be able to construct battleships. There is no doubt but that they can manufacture anything they please, for their workmen are among the most skilled upon earth, and they are ready to adopt any new thing at a moment's notice. They have their mechanical and naval engineers in all of the great shipyards of the world, studying the newest methods and superintending the construction of ships intended for Japan. You will find them at Cramps' in Philadelphia, I saw some at the Krupp works in Essen, and they are also at the Vulcan shipyards in Stettin.

The six first-class battleships now in the Japanese navy were all built in Great Britain. They are twin-screw steel vessels, with an ordinary speed of sixteen knots, and a possible speed of eighteen knots or more. They are protected by belts of Harveyized metal from fourteen to eighteen inches thick, and they each carry four 12-inch guns, ten 6-inch quick-firing guns, twenty-four rapid-firing and five torpedo tubes. The largest of these ships is the Misaka. She has 15,200 tons, and 15,000 horse power, and she can make eighteen knots an hour. It takes 741 men to manage her.

Some of Japan's second-class ships were built in Germany, and some of them came from the Chinese. Two of her protected cruisers were built in the United States, one at Philadelphia and the other at San Francisco. They are just alike in design, but the San Francisco cruiser is the faster, having made almost twenty-four knots an hour.

Japan has also a number of merchant vessels which can be called upon in case of war. She has some of the largest shipping companies of the world, the Nippon Yusan Kaisha, for instance. This company has thirty-three steamers, and it sends them to Vladivostok in Siberia, to Korea, China and Manila, and also to Australia, India, and through the Suez Canal to London. Other Japanese ships connect Yokohama and San Francisco, so that in respect to transport vessels, the Mikado is perhaps better off than the Czar.

A Nation of Sailors.

The Japanese are at home upon the sea. They are a nation of sailors. They had their men-of-war in feudal days and sent out armies to Korea and China. They are wonderfully nimble with their feet and hands, it being commonly said that the Japanese has twenty fingers, ten on his hands and ten on his feet.

They are also good fighters, and may be called a nation of warriors. At the time that Commodore Perry opened the country, it was ruled by a class of feudal knights and retainers, whose profession was war. The sons of these old warriors are now at the head of the Japanese government, and are the leaders of the army and navy. They are animated by the spirit of their fathers. They are the most patriotic people on earth, the most sentimental, and the most ambitious. They delight in the spectacular, and almost any one of them would be willing to die if his death would leave a reputation behind him.

At present every Japanese between seventeen and forty is subject to military service. The army organization is much like that of Germany. The troops have been trained by German officers, and in all the military schools there are German instructors. There are at present more than 600,000 men in the regular army, including 11,000 officers. There are more than 35,000 officers and men in the navy. The training there has been the same as that of the navies of Europe, and the naval officers and their marines are as well disciplined as ours.

The Question of Supplies.

In case war should come between Japan and Russia the question of supplies will be a most important one. In this Japan will have the advantage. Almost every part of its empire is productive, and it can feed its troops without trouble. It is one of the richest food-producing countries of the Far East, raising vast quantities of rice and other cereals. It has plenty of coal, and sufficient iron to keep it going. Its railroad system is such that every part of the empire can send goods and troops to the seaports, so that all the resources of its forty million people are available.

Besides, the Japanese can live upon almost nothing. Their staple diet is rice. At the time of the Chinese-Japanese war the soldiers lived almost entirely on rice, dried fish and canned meat, a large part of the latter article being supplied by the United States. The people are fond of canned salmon, and they like to have pickles to eat with their rice. They are not great eaters, and can work long on small rations. The same is true to some extent of the Russians, although the Russian peasant is fond of gorging, and overloads his stomach whenever it is possible to do so.

How About Korea?

One of the most interesting possibilities of this war will be the future of Korea. That little peninsula, only about as large as the State of Kansas, is coveted by both Japan and Russia. It is one of the richest countries of the Far East. It has gold mines now worked by Americans and Germans, coal mines which are said to be of enormous value, and a vast area of cultivable soil. It has good forests, and it would be worth everything to Russia, as it would bring her empire and railroad several hundred miles farther south.

Ever since the Chinese-Japanese war the Japanese have been colonizing Korea. Each of the port cities has a Japanese quarter, where some of the finest buildings are, and where the most of the business is done. This is the case with Fusan, on the southern coast, with Chemulpo on the west and Gensan on the east. At these places there are Japanese banks, Japanese exporting and importing firms, and the business generally is in the hands of the Japanese. This is so to some extent in Seoul, the capital.

The Japanese are building a number of new railroads in Korea. They have bought the little line which was constructed by Americans from Chemulpo to Seoul, and they are building a trunk line from Fusan to Seoul, which will have a great trade and will bring Japan within a very few hours of the capital of Korea. I understand they are also planning roads to the east and to the north of Seoul, so that in time their railroads will cover the country. At the same time the Koreans do not want to be swallowed up by the Japanese, and they are glad to have Russia as a buffer between them and their almond-eyed cousins across the strait.

INCIDENTS OF A CALIFORNIA WOMAN'S SOJOURN.

AN INTERESTING YOUNG TEACHER—INDIAN SUPERSTITIONS—THE MUNSHI'S LOGIC—BEDS NOT APPRECIATED—THE LOTUS IN BLOOM—THE MULBERRY CROP—RICE HARVEST.

From a Special Correspondent.

OUR munshi, Karima Nand, has proved to be a most interesting person. He was educated at the Church Mission High School, but is as devout a Hindoo as one can find, and, being of the Brahman or priest caste, can do no work, so he is forced, if he does not become a priest, to do something which will not require manual labor. Karima, whom we always call munshi (teacher,) and who is called by the natives pundit, which means that he is educated person, is not a priest, and wishes to become a teacher. Indeed, his one aim in life is to go to the Lahore College—which he could easily do if he could get the consent of his father, as the Maharajah pays the expenses of all boys sent there from Kashmir—and there to study Sanscrit and Arabic, when, with his knowledge of Hindustanee and Persian, he would be fitted to be a professor of oriental languages.

He certainly has great talent as a teacher, and as he knows English very well indeed, would be a real acquisition for one of the American universities. He knows his languages scientifically, and takes a deep interest in the construction of each. His manners are perfect, and he is very broad-minded in regard to all religions, but at the same time clings sturdily to his own, which he dreams of reforming. He tells us that the priests are very corrupt, and do nothing except for money; that the books are read in Sanscrit, which is not understood by one in two or three hundred, and that consequently the mass of the people are totally ignorant of the precepts of their religion.

There are numbers of superstitions, of course, passed down from father to son, but he tells us that the educated Hindoo of Kashmir worships one god, either Brahma, Vishnu or Shiva; that he begins his prayer by an invocation to Ganeesh, the elephant-headed god, who is the son of Shiva, and is the god of "good luck," or if he does not, the prayer will not be heard; and that of all the hundreds of minor gods, which correspond to the saints in the Roman Catholic Church, each has his elephant household god which he may choose himself. He also says that all the sacred stones or sacred places to which pilgrimages are made and which are worshiped by the ignorant as gods, are in reality only meant for reminders of better things, halting places for reflection, as it were.

Their superstitions are of course countless, and one which rather appeals to us is that in wearing in a little box or silver tube around the neck a bit of paper with a prayer by one of the priests written on it, one guards one's self against misfortune. Karima is very anxious to have us wear such prayers during our further journeyings, and I rather like the idea. Why not wear it? It is much the same thing as having a four-leafed clover in a bracelet, or hanging a horse shoe over one's door, for "good luck."

The Munshi's Logic.

The caste marks of the Brahmans, we are told, are made of powdered flowers mixed with sandalwood oil, the flowers giving the color, and each caste mark differs only in its composition. We asked the munshi one day how he, as a fatalist, could believe in prayer or petition, and he answered: "Every cart has two wheels, Huzoor, is it not so?" We could not deny that, and he went on, "and no cart can go on one wheel, that is of a truth! Then take it that our destiny is as the cart, one wheel being the will of God, and the other the will of man, does not that explain itself?" If it did not, at least, it was a nice argument. His English is so nearly perfect that we were surprised when he, on being asked by us the meaning of the verb "sakta"—to be able—answered: "It's meaning, Madame, is to can." Also, when we asked him the meaning of "rang-rez ke koll" (dyehouse,) he answered, "Dyery." And why should it not be dyery when a bakehouse is a bakery? He loves his people, but thinks them uncivilized, and said with scorn that a Kashmiri would, rather than have his son leave Kashmir in order to study, or for any other purpose, have him sit about the streets doing nothing; and indeed the Kashmir as a class is perfectly willing to do his father's bidding in that respect.

Chatar Singh, an educated Kashmiri, who is supposed to keep the boatmen in order and have an eye to the general comfort of the stranger in the valley, told us that, rather than work, a Kashmiri would pay, out of his starvation poverty, another man to do his work for him, and that once during a famine here the rice having fallen short, he had found work at two annas a day (four cents) for a native who he knew needed it badly, but that after one day the man had paid another coolie out of his few remaining annas the sum of two annas a day to take his place while he sat on the ground in the sun and did nothing, unless it was starve. The other day we wanted some bazar purchases carried half a mile or more for us, and as the usual coolie with his load was not to be found, we accosted a young boy of fifteen or thereabouts, and offered him two pice (a cent) the usual wage. He refused it smilingly, and said he would do it for two annas, which, as we were in a great hurry, we gave him. He felt of our purchase, which was some native cotton cloth for dish towels, weighing about two pounds, and all unwrapped, and then called another youth, and they shared the very light weight, as they did the four cents.

Beds Not Appreciated.

Beds are evidently not used very much in Kashmir, for on giving an old bed to one of our boatmen, he salaamed politely, and the man said: "Huzoor, this bed to me not good is. He is much too cold to sleep in. I will take, but to look at, Huzoor, not to sleep upon." If their broken English is funny to us, what must our dreadful Hindustanee be to them. The other day we were engaged in ordering some extra rush mats which we wished to have especially fresh and clean, and we said in severe tones: "Chataye a behot maila aur purana" (the oldest and dirtiest of matting,) and the very unclean and lightly-clothed native nodded with perfectly solemn countenance, and said: "Atcha, Huzoor" ("All right, Highness, or Your Honor.")

Lotus Blossoms.

The lotus has at last come into flower! We have looked eagerly for weeks at the huge leaves which are sometimes as big as a tea table, lying flat out on the water, but found no sign of buds for a long time, and then for another long time only the green, tightly-closed bud five or six inches in length, but at last, much to our joy, they have gently unfolded and shown us their color, such an enchanting color, too—a lovely rose-pink. The flower, when open, is bigger than the largest dinner plate, and is like an enormous, but very delicate water lily, but it is the half-open bud one most often sees, big but daintily tinted, and making an exquisite picture beside its beautifully green leaf. We, during our last week on the Dal Lake spent all our afternoons paddling about among the rushes in our tiny shikara looking for lotus; and the lovely moonlit evenings in much the same way, though usually all together in one of the larger boats, that belonging to the colonel, with eight boatmen, all in two shades of green, paddled us for two miles up and down the lake. Sometimes we took a picnic dinner in the beautiful Nishat Bagh, Lalla Rookh's garden, where we had our strawberries and cream, the very last of the strawberries, or mulberries and other dainties, seated on a large flat rock on the uppermost terrace of the garden in the midst of the rushing waters, from which we could see the moonlit on the distant lake and at the same time have the fragrance of many roses and the rustle of the chinar leaves near by to delight our noses and ears.

Everything in Kashmir dates from the time the mulberries are ripe or the "rice in ear." When we asked our boatmen, who, we found, were overcharging us in our fowls, why chickens were so dear, as we had always understood that they were very cheap throughout the valley, they always answered, "Huzoor, wait until the mulberries are ripe." Again, when we asked them how long before the lotus would be "abloom," their answer was: "Huzoor, soon after the mulberries are ripe." Then came the mulberries, dark purple and white, big and juicy, and all one had to do was to moor under a mulberry tree and send the youngest boatman up for a basketful. One soon got tired of their insipid flavor, however, and much more tired of seeing their stain on fingers, lips and clothes, of stepping on smashed mulberries, sitting on and smelling other mulberries, and, in fact, seeing mulberries, no matter where one looked.

The Rice Harvest.

Now we are referred to the time of the rice harvest, and certainly rice ought to bring in returns, for it seems to be of endless trouble, first in making and grading delicately the little ponds in which it is scattered broadcast; then when the countless pale green shoots appear, in thinning it by pulling up three-quarters of them, tying them into tiny bundles and thrusting them down into the mud again, then in the harvesting and finally in the husking, which is done by pouring a basket of the rice into a huge wooden or earthen bowl and pounding it with heavy poles. There has been so much rain this year that there are many fears for the rice crop. It has rained hard now for three days, and the river has risen four feet and made it necessary to close both the canal gate and the Dal Darwaza, or gate of the lake.

It is not considered a very good thing to remain in a house boat on the river or lake during July and August, though many people do so, and Srinuggur during those months is quite deserted, for the inhabitants go en masse up into the mountains to the fashionable Gulmurg. We had intended to run the risk and remain in our boat, but as one of our friends had the good fortune to find a house for rent, and suggested our taking it with her, we were quite content to do so, and are now living in a pretty bungalow on the "Bund," the main walk, with big rooms, each with its bathroom, and a huge garden at the back with two big chinar trees and roses galore. The rent of the house, the five servants and the food for the three, all included, comes to the large sum of $62.31, making it $20.77 a month each! We have plenty of fresh vegetables and fruit, and we have fowls, ducks, geese and occasionally mutton, though often, as it is quite uneatably tough. We have horses to ride at 33 cents a day, which includes a sais or groom to walk or run behind as one wishes, and we are more content than ever before in Kashmir, for we realize how crowded and cramped one is in a dunga, and how hot and stuffy in a house boat. Our friends have moored their boats not far away on the river, and we feel that we are quite the "monarchs of all we survey!"

The Pope's Coronation.

DESCRIBED BY A LOS ANGELES WOMAN WHO SAW IT.

THE RUSH FOR TICKETS—FRENZIED CROWDS WITHOUT AND A PANIC WITHIN—CORRESPONDENT FAINTS AND IS TAKEN TO IMPROVISED HOSPITAL. VIEW OF ROMAN NOBILITY—MASS BY THE POPE. AN IMPRESSIVE BENEDICTION.

From a Special Correspondent.

THE moments of frenzied joy and triumph after the first solemn benediction of Pius X in the Basilica were followed by days of calm, when Rome did a little growling, that the Father had not blessed the people on the piazza. They were disposed to be rather cross, but every one who stood nearest to the dear Father spoke in such loving terms, and told of his gentleness, his simplicity, his goodness to everybody, and a tide of love rolled up from all these loyal hearts. Soon after his election it was rumored in the Vatican that he had strolled down to the great musée and wandered through its treasure house, quite unofficially, to the amazement of the doorkeeper, in a manner that no Pope was known to do.

Preparations for the great coronation followed immediately, that the many foreign cardinals might be present. Not for fifty-six years had there been a like occasion, as Leo XIII refused a public ceremony, and held his coronation in the limited Sistine Chapel. The absorbing thought of all was the possibility of a ticket. Then the city had a big surprise. Consuls and general diplomats were helpless. The disposition of coveted tickets was not in the hands of nobility or government. The higher the rank, the fewer the number. Cardinal Gibbons had ten tickets only at his disposal. Mgr. Kennedy of the American College, resident of Rome, received but fifteen. A very limited number, 1500 reserved tickets in blue, were scattered among the old Roman nobles, the "black" families, as they are called, for whom a tribune was built, and partitioned off, with access from a side entrance. The Pope declared that this must be the people's ceremony, and the great mass of 60,000 tickets was sent to the parish priests, to be distributed among their people. Rejected by Father Kennedy of the college, I flew to the Schiarra Palace, where my ticket had been reserved by that most charming of Italy's mannered men, Sig. Cortesi.

Sig. Cortesi's Courtesy.

He is the American press representative in Italy, and it is to his untiring and almost superhuman efforts that the Associated Press owes the magnificent record of those exciting five weeks. The cabling has been at a cost of $30,000 for the news so greedily devoured by American readers. From the Vatican to New York sped the dispatches in nine minutes of time. That meant from the Vatican to Mr. Cortesi's office, to the telephone house, to Brest, to New York. Such is the flash of the electric spark, such the wondrous work of science in the twentieth century. Day after day, in all these weeks, he has worked like a giant, to send his columns of facts and details.

On emerging from his home, the desired tickets were for sale on the street at five francs each, or two for nine francs. Such is the contrariety of things. On reaching the pension, a ticket was tacked up in my room by that dearest of angelic Roman matrons, Signora Pieri, with whom I wish every good American tourist might find a home. She, too, had a clew at the Vatican, and in these days people fished with every line. She had expressed little hope, but always the faithful assurance, "My first ticket is for you, if I get any. You have given all your summer to it, and the Times is such a very large paper!" Throughout the family she had made it known where her first or only ticket would land. The padrone looked blank when an American paid eleven francs for a ticket, and they were aghast when another paid 5000 francs for places in the tribune.

That was a noisy night in Rome. People had gone wild in anticipation. Students sang, cabs rolled, citizens shouted. The city bells cut queer antics. The electric lights turned off at 4:30 o'clock a.m. and left the old city in fog that was worthy only of London. An impenetrable shroud enveloped all things. Romeo, engaged the night previous, was faithful to his vow, and with a bite of bread and a swallow of wine, to sustain the day's fatigue, I was cutting through the mist, at 5 a.m. The doors were to open at 6, the function to begin at 8:30. Speeding past the grim castle of San Angelo, the big clock and the angel had disappeared. Arrived at the tall obelisk, the great cathedral had entirely vanished. From the base of its steps, at 6:30, it reappeared in dim outline, flanked by troops and approached by hundreds of patient, enthusiastic watchers and waiters. Many had sat all night on the cold stone steps, and many others had waited since 3 a.m. Who can ever say why people do such crazy things? They were very good and very jolly till the hands moved toward 6. Then the minor bells broke loose in joy, and soon the big Campanone chimed its underground swell, boom, boom, boom, in deep, dignified measure. The humblest soul loves the cannon-voiced Campanone, and for a time its dull thud distracted the people.

A Frenzied Crowd.

But at 6:10 festiveness passed into wrath and impatience became fury. Then followed such stampede and panic as no mortal man would ever wish to see. There was no room to drop, or hundreds would have fallen in their fright. The pressure all about kept people half upright, when they had lost all foothold. Before, behind, on either side, the mad crowds surged. No one could get to the edge. They had swarmed and swarmed, till it seemed that the whole human world had closed in on the advance guard. Strong men turned livid. Frail women begged for life. People shrieked for pity. They clung and clutched and pulled upon each other. "Non spingere, non spingere!" went up in frantic screams. "Piano, piano!" rang pitifully through the fog. One might as well cry to the savage beasts of the forests. Escape was hopeless, and death terrible and tragic, was far more probable than life in those awful ten minutes. "Sentimale; sentimale!" was frantically yelled, as the heads of fainting women drooped to the shoulders of their neighbors. From side to side, forth and back, swung that living pendulum, lost to hope or pity. Sometimes our neighbors walked all over our feet. At other times we had no feet for them to tread on, as we were lifted in the air, and borne on, like angels caught in the crowd, holding madly to our neighbors, and wondering if we should land upright, and when. Swept to the right, lurched to the left, the angry, pent-up, human ocean tossed in turbulent waves of life, till it burst its flood gates, and broke loose in torrents, deluging the steps with its living tide. Men jumped the barriers, and the crowds swept past the barricade. Never was a thing so absolutely imbecile and helpless as that "protecting" Roman army. They did not want to shoot us, they had not come there for that purpose, and so they simply stood and grinned; they shook their sides and laughed at the mad battle for life in the square.

At 6:20 o'clock the thousands were allowed to pour into the Basilica. Tickets were a splendid fiasco. The pompous guard at the gate cried, "Biglietto a mano," but no one saw or cared whether any one had a ticket. As great a farce was the regulation black robe and veil which passing tourists had struggled to obtain. A chemise of leather or a coat of mail was all one needed for that crush. Hundreds there were who possessed no outfit, and wore every ordinary gown and color. Within the church came another mad dash for a place. Besides the 60,000 ticketed spectators, 10,000 illegitimates had rushed the entrance.

I had bolted to the barrier which separated the crowds by a free space from the tribune, and the great scene of action. It was but a very few moments till the great church was filled, and 60,000 people were behind me; a goodly city. The guards closed the doors, to debar more advancing hordes. Then followed another indescribable panic, as the throngs realized they were prisoners. The air was peppered with profanity. Gentle sisters shrieked their "Saneta fede," and "Sanctissima Maria," and maddened men roared horrible imprecations. Children, nearly trampled by the mob, were lifted in air and passed from man to man, over the heads of the crowd. Swooning women were likewise borne away. Should the scores of thousands suddenly lurch forward, no power could save the inevitable catastrophe. The barrier could not withstand the pressure. Hundreds would be precipitated forward, in an entangled, undistinguishable mass. It was an awful thought, but highly probable.

Rescued by Carbineers.

In that vast throng I knew just two persons, and by an incredible accident of Fate, which would be declared impossible in any novel, I had landed near one of them, a man in authority, in the free space. The awful strain had told upon me. I was very dazed. I had not seen him when he recognized my need for air, and gave the order. Two magnificent pontifical carabinieri sprang to the rail and began a manly pull, while my near neighbors aided the limp creature with a push. I was hoisted bodily over the barrier and dragged away. For a moment the world seemed swimming in blue uniforms, white braid and floating plumes. Smelling salts cleared away the haze, and I was half carried, half dragged through the beautiful chapel of St. Gregory, which was a misty mass of tapestries that recalled Indian embroidery. They opened the "pliant" on my arm, and dropped me in a quiet corner, to meditate on the frailty of humanity. Gracious noblemen came and kindly spoke. The words, "Socorre—dottore—sanitario," fluttered vaguely to my ears, and I desperately feared they would pronounce me too weak for the scene, and drive me off the field. Doctors felt my pulse, and bathed my temples. A soft-voiced sister blistered my face with aromatic vinegar. They went to other duties and left me in the cool, peaceful nook. What a paradise it was! A little later I realized that the only one in sight was that magnificent creation, a Swiss guard, devoted to my charge. He fixed me with unblinking eye. Within hand's reach, the altar held two glorious crowns, glittering with gold and jewels, inlaid with medallions. They had brought me to the very holy of holies. An attendant brought the live coals of the sacred fire. As I revived, a kindly escort helped me crawl away. A space had been partitioned off with couches and essentials, drugs, and druggists, physicians, and gentle sisters. "First aids to the injured" were plentiful and much needed.

A View of Roman Nobility.

Near by was the entrance for the élite, who could arrive in peace, at the same hour of eight. As a study in Roman nobility, they were a rare delight. What a review of elegant dames and lordly men, queenly women with glorious pearls, and courtiers straight from the scenes of Elizabeth and Raleigh! Slippers with silver buckles, black hose, and velvet garters with more flashing silver, knee breeches, and flowing velvet cape torsed to one side, a stiff double ruff relieving the black, were set off by saber and jewels and orders. Generals blazed with bands of ribbon, and with the glories they had won. Noblemen were spotted with orders, stars, medals, and flashing gems. Some were bound in massive chains of gold; others wore brilliant ribbons and flashing pendants directly under the collar.

What a color scheme were those magnificent guards! Plumes and pompoms floated and bobbed above the fire-red of the Guard Noble, who surrounded the high altar. Behind them stood their trumpeters in brilliant blue, with brazen helmets. The towering pontifical guards were resplendent in top boots and spurs, white breeches, dark blue and white cord, and such tall "cossacks" as seldom freight a human head. The regal Swiss moved like a passing spectrum, and among them all, sparkled and flashed the long spears.

Throughout the church were posted signs forbidding all applause. But what law or order could control that frenzied Italian populace? At about 9 o'clock, the great cortège approached the entrance. Rampolla as Vicar of the Basilica, received His Holiness, who was borne first to the Sacred Chapel, where Leo so lately lay in quiet state. There the church vestments were changed, and the procession crossed to the chapel of St. Gregory, where was performed a service, and a solemn chant arose. Then the procession moved the length of the church. What a spectacle of splendor it was! A moving panorama of scintillating emblems, and beautiful apparel. Acolytes, bearers, bishops, archbishops, monsignors, in spotless white, cardinals in white and gold of gorgeous decorations. Before the Great Father, flamed the torch of the sacred fire. Under the beautiful baldacchino of white and gold was carried the holy chair, of richest crimson, embossed in gold, which held the loved Pope. On either side, above the bearers, were the standards of magnificent white plumes. Dignified and majestic he rode through the crowd, the great shepherd of a world-wide flock, blessing, blessing, ever blessing his people, with that mystical sign of the cross in mid-air.

Never had such thunders of applause risen to the vaulted roof and reëchoed in the dome of St. Peter's. That whole Italian populace threw itself out in one voice. Cries of "Viva il Papa!" "Bravo Sarto!" rang through the church. Thousands of clapping hands added to the applause, and thousands of handkerchiefs waved like a white cloud in the air. Such a moment of supreme emotion is rarely seen twice in a life time.

Slowly the white cortège swept on, that the Father might perform the ceremony in the tribune. Marvelous music rolled out from the priestly choir, when the deep-toned bass give a solemn undercurrent to the flood of sweet angel tones, that rose in floods of harmony, as if Heaven had flung wide its gates to consecrate the ceremony with celestial strains. Where else are heard such pure, clear notes, as ring from the famed "Pope's angels?" The throng held its breath to listen, and a gentle peace fell on the assembly, to calm, for the moment, the turbulent people.

The Ceremony.

As Pius X mounted under the bronze baldacchino and kissed the high altar of St. Peter, a reverent hush fell on the house. Monsignors in bright red prepared the ceremony, and famed cardinals were in view; those great churchmen, who, in these last days, had been in the thick of the fierce fight for supremacy. Oreglia, oldest in the papal service, a cardinal of thirty years, who assisted at the last coronation; Macchi, Pierotti, Vincenzo Vannutelli were important functionaries. As one beautiful mitre and then another were adjusted, the assisting cardinals kissed His Holiness upon the cheeks. The cardinals had all previously kissed his hand and knee and toe, in token of recognition.

Only those most highly learned in the Catholic faith can appreciate or understand this most complicated service of coronation, which extends over four hours. But as he gave the blessing, every form was bowed. After the mass there was more ceremony at the tribune, and he returned to the high altar to celebrate the holy communion. As he reverently raised the Host, every high official, the Swiss Guard, the Guard Noble, knelt as a unit. The whole church knelt. There was no room, no place, but it was the supreme moment, when every one crouched on bended knee. He returned to the beautiful sedia geotatoria, with its gorgeous canopy, to be borne to the open space before the high altar, for the grand climax of this imposing ceremony.

Then a frenzy of applause broke wildly from the people, a convulsion of emotions indescribable. One wished that the aged mother of the North had lived a few years longer, and one hoped that her spirit hovered in the edifice, or that from high Heaven she saw the triumph of her son. The sisters were not present, but a nephew who is a parish priest saw his simple-hearted, large-souled uncle become Pontifex Maximus. The Catholic world rejoices that it has a young Pope, and his sixty-eight years seem youthful in comparison with the ninety-three of Leo. His photographs taken twenty years ago show a much younger man than the Pope of today. How tired and faint he looked, how worn and full of care! "Quasi morto," they murmured, yet so benign, so gracious and so loving, as he looked out upon his people, ever making the mystic sign. What a day of fatigue it had been for him, and for all his officials. Not a mouthful could they taste till after the elaborate ceremony.

It was a little past one o'clock, when the magnificent crown was adjusted, dazzling like the sun. Before the altar—Pontifex Maximus of the world—he effaced the great sea of humanity, which sent its hurlements to the roof till it seemed as if the great temple would be rent to let the sound escape. The hush which followed was startlingly solemn, as the service continued, and the responses were taken up by the ministrants. Then his voice rang clear and strong, to every corner of the vast cathedral, magnetic with tender love, and the heart of every penitent responded "Amen!" as the great Father gave the solemn benediction of the church to the kneeling multitude. Nothing could surpass the impressive majesty of the deep, sonorous Latin of the words: "May the blessing of God the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, descend upon you, and remain always."

INTERESTING INCIDENTS OF A HUMBLE EARLY LIFE.

From a Special Correspondent.

ROME, Aug. 20.—"Oh, what a misfortune! My poor Beppo, who so loved a comfortable chat! Who knows what misery he will go through in that prison there in Rome!" These were the words, said with tears and real grief, with which Maria, sister of Pius X, received the news that he had been made Pope, and they epitomize the feeling of the family about this elevation of their "Beppo" to one of the most powerful positions on earth.

The Sarto family is humble; has never been anything else, and never will be anything else. They have no ambitions above their station, and, as yet, are too unsophisticated to count on what the Pontiff can do for them. His only brother, Angelo, the day after Pius X's election, was found in the little piazza of the village of Riese, near Venice, lording it over his fellow peasants and talking about "my brother, the Pope"; but when approached by even so humble an individual as a journalist, he subsided suddenly, like a pricked balloon, and became his usual modest self.

Asked what he would do now, he at once began: "Do? Why heaps of things. Beppo is now Pope, you know, and he will buy out my rival in the village, and I shall be cock of the walk! He may perhaps buy me a mule and trap; that would be fine!"

"I have debts," he continued with a sigh. "If Beppo will relieve me of them, that would be much. Yes, I must owe at least forty dollars, and shall never have it by myself."

This was as high as his ambition could soar. He is one year older than the Pope, and has so far been distinguished merely for a sturdy independence, not above receiving help and favors from his brother when the latter could afford it; but owing his present relief from real poverty to his own exertions.

In his little pork and tobacco shop are to be seen usually one or other of his rather pretty daughters, so that the youths of the town spend most of their cents there, thinking a cigar, which they do not want, cheaply bought if it brings a smile from either of the two girls.

The girls have a great sense of their own importance, and when dressed in the latest fashion, their black eyes sparkling, their dark cheeks glowing and their glossy curly hair carefully dressed—as of course they have never worn hats—they form a picture of health and vitality pleasant to look upon, but which certainly needs the background of the village street to set it off. They are both unmarried, and being more modern than the rest of the family, it is likely if they come to Rome, that they would assimilate the atmosphere to a certain extent, and make more or less brilliant marriages.

That Sarto Boy Stole His Cherries.

The Pope's early training was all against fitting him for his new position. His younger years were spent in a country village amidst the most dire poverty, his days passed in helping his parents and sisters in their work, or in trying himself to earn a few cents from time to time, often hungry, although not really lacking the necessities of life. The winter was the hardest period, as cold penetrated the walls of the little two-story house, clothing was insufficient, and he had to wear shoes and stockings which he hated. School was not even mentioned. Education in those days, sixty years ago, was certainly not compulsory, and even his parents thought little of it, for many peasants then, as now, could not even sign their names.

Beppo (diminutive for Guiseppe,) however, had the fortune to attract the attention of the parish priest, who taught him his first letters and set him on the road to learning; and, once started, he went on by himself. An old farmer of the district, now nearly 90 years of age, when told that Guiseppe Sarto had been made Pope, exclaimed:

"Not Beppo; not that little rascal! Many are the cherries he has taken off my trees; me underneath the tree with a stick, and he bidding me defiance and pelting me with stones. The last time he did it, I caught his boot, and a merry dance we had about that field. But he was a good chap. When my old woman died and he was already cardinal, he forgot his dignity and helped me not only with money, but with prayers. If I was not so old, I would go to visit him at the Vatican!"

Later, Bishop Monaco took a fancy to the bright boy and sent him to school, where he was head and front of all the mischief. He then took orders, and thus the career which was to end on the very pinnacle of earthly success was inaugurated. At the age of 23 he was assistant to the parish priest of Tombolo, and [illegible] first seen the characteristic which was later to [illegible] guish him. Give, give—has always been his motto, with one hand and then with the other, and if necessary, with both together; but never cease.

Robbed Him of His Soup.

So far has he carried this precept that to go without his dinner while another ate was too common occurrence to cause remark. Once—in those days when he sold his little horse to pay some debts contracted for the family—he came home half dead after a tramp of [illegible] to the "deathbed" of a man who proved to have [illegible] the matter with him, and sat down to a steaming bowl of soup. "This is good," he exclaimed, when the spoon was arrested half way to his mouth by the appearance of a young person, who came in at the door, sat down at the table, reached over, took his soup, and ate it all to the last spoonful. She then rose, dropped a courtesy to the spellbound priest, and as she left said jauntily: "It was very good; they told me you lived on bread and water to serve the poor, and I will prove that it was a lie!" Such was all the thanks he got, and this was the only time on record when charity was not only involuntary, but given with grace.

His poor old mother adored him, but refused to go with him when he rose to the splendid position of parish priest. "No, my dears," she said, "I was born in Riese, and here I shall die. Go your ways, and your good fortune, and send your linen to me when it needs mending."

Unsuited for Luxury.

And with this blessing she sent him out into the world, her best beloved son. The old lady was shrewd, and when his sisters would have liked to go with him in what was considered the brilliant position of sister to a parish priest, she said: "No, no, dears, you stay where you are; there you will put on no airs, so never get married, while here you are what you are, and the boys will take you to wife;" which proved true with three out of the six. The other three, also death of their mother, lived in the archbishop's palace at the Cathedral of St. Mark's in Venice, with their brother, their only object in life being to make him happy and comfortable; hence the lament with which this article begins.

Their case is in fact rather hard. As Pope their brother can give them nothing for which they would care. As sisters of the Patriarch of Venice, they have entered society and taken a responsible position, but they tookno pleasure in such a life, and persistently refused all overtures. What can Pius X do? Only make life easier by giving them money, which they do not want, while in being elected Pope, everything for which the poor ladies, no longer young, cared for, has been removed at one blow. Beppo! he is their world, but now practically dead to them. Even if they come to Rome they could not see him, unless they formally ask for an audience, while the comfortable talks and [illegible] the loving doings of little services, the family meals, are all a thing of the past. He is Pope, they are poor, and no amount of love can bridge the chasm.

Strange Coincidence.

These three ladies, like all women of their class, superstitious, and have made up their minds that his election to the chair of St. Peter has set a limit to his life. "If it had been next year the charm would have been broken," said Maria, "but now there is no proof that he will die in 1912. Whenever the pope dies 9 come, I expect a change, and no one can say the reason. At 9 years of age he began studying and he was nine years parish priest, nine years vicar general, nine years bishop, nine years cardinal, and of course he will be nine years Pope, and after that there is nothing but heaven to attain, so of course he will leave us." And nothing would or could persuade to the contrary.

Meanwhile the Pontiff, for his part, is not at all happy in his "prison." So far his entire time has been absorbed in giving audiences and making appointments, but the confinement has already told on the [illegible] walk, climb, to run if need be, anything to [illegible] blood circulate."

After which outbreak he seemed to feel better and went on laughingly: "Do you know my temper is deteriorating, I who used to never let anything [illegible] me." This should not be taken, however, to mean that Pius X is not proud of his new position, with appreciation of his responsibility and privileges. He is an interesting figure to the outside world, though really unknown. He is handsome and benignant, not stately; charitable and pious, but not [illegible] handed. In other words, he is a good-looking, kind-hearted, frugal-minded, peace-loving man, who would be even a cardinal, if you like, but not the man one would naturally picture as the head of Roman Catholicism, leader of men and director of a delicate machine like the See.

I WANDERED BY THE BROOKSIDE

I wandered by the brookside,
I wandered by the mill,
I could not hear the brook flow,
The noisy wheel was still.
There was no burr of grasshopper,
No chirp of any bird;
But the beating of my own heart
Was all the sound I heard.

I sat beneath the elm tree,
I watched the long, long shade,
And as it grew still longer,
I did not feel afraid;
For I listened for a footfall,
I listened for a word;
But the beating of my own heart
Was all the sound I heard.

He came not—no, he came not—
The night came on alone,
The little stars sat, one by one,
Each on his golden throne;
The evening air passed by my cheek,
The leaves above were stirred;
But the beating of my own heart
Was all the sound I heard.

Fast, silent tears were flowing,
When something stood behind,
A hand was on my shoulder,
I knew its touch was kind;
It drew me nearer, nearer,
We did not speak one word;
For the beating of our hearts
Was all the sound we heard.

hearty man, who does not look much over sixty, and he misses the care of his feminine relatives. A button comes off, and there is only a man to sew it on; his rooms are not well dusted, and there seems to be no one to complain to; his meals are dainty, but not prepared as he is accustomed to having them; his spiced wine does not taste as it should, his bed has lumps, or his bath is too cold.

Unhappy in the Vatican.

These little woes are felt acutely by one who has never even had to think of such things. Above all, he misses the sun, his swims therein, and his long walks along the roads. To a familiar who was with him in the Vatican gardens he exclaimed: "Shall I always have this longing for the country and for the sea? It is rather an aggravation than otherwise to look at the promised land, which is in this case the sea (Mediterranean,) from the observatory and not be able to go near it. I want

He is an interesting figure to the outside world, because so little known. He is handsome and benignant, but not saintly; charitable and pious, but not too free-handed; in other words, he is a good-looking, large-minded, frugal-minded, peace-loving man, made to be a cardinal, if you like, but not the man one would fancy picture as the head of Roman Catholicism, a ruler of men and director of a delicate machine like the Church.

But the beating of my own heart
Was all the sound I heard.

He came not—no, he came not—
The night came on alone,
The little stars sat, one by one,
Each on his golden throne;
The evening air passed by my cheek,
The leaves above were stirred;
But the beating of my own heart
Was all the sound I heard.

Fast, silent tears were flowing,
When something stood behind,
A hand was on my shoulder,
I knew its touch was kind;
It drew me nearer, nearer,
We did not speak one word;
For the beating of our hearts
Was all the sound we heard.

Forbidden Animals.

THE MONGOOSE AND OTHERS ON THE COUNTRY'S BLACK LIST.

From a Special Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 27.—Since the annexation of Hawaii, Porto Rico, and the Philippines to the United States, custom officials in every port of entry in this country have received repeated and urgent orders to maintain a vigilant lookout for several varieties of undesired birds and quadrupeds.

The alien of the animal kingdom against which the most rigid exclusion is enforced is the mongoose. Upon no consideration is this unique creature allowed to land from foreign ports or even to be shipped from one section of American territory to another.

To carry this proscription into effect, two Cabinet officers are invoking the far-reaching power of their departments. Secretary Wilson has convinced Secretary Shaw that the coming of the mongoose would be as great a menace to American prosperity as would be the unrestricted advent of anarchists, or paupers. The Secretary of the Treasury, therefore, working in co-operation with the Secretary of Agriculture, has issued the strictest orders to see that no mongoose is put down alive on American soil.

The sweeping character of the order, and the evident determination on the part of Secretary Wilson and Secretary Shaw to exact its enforcement, have created on the part of minor officials an eager desire for information concerning the animal in question. A number of inquiries have come from customs officials asking what sort of a "bird" the mongoose is, so that they might be able instantly to arrest any attempt to smuggle it into this country.

Instructions have now gone forth so that officials who thought that the mongoose was some sort of a predatory bird shall be able to identify the quadruped, and to understand why the government requires that it should be killed instantly upon arrival.

"Should the mongoose get a foothold in the United States," said Dr. T. A. Palmer of the hospital survey, "it would work the greatest possible calamity upon the farming industry of the country."

The mongoose is a native of India. The ichneumon of Egypt, which commends itself to the inhabitants along the Nile, because of its appetite for crocodile eggs, is a member of the same family. In India the mongoose is held in high esteem, for it is unequaled as a devourer of rats, and to accomplish this purpose is domesticated in thousands of Hindoo homes.

Moreover, though it is a small animal, it does not hesitate to attack large and venomous reptiles, invariably causing their death. It is popularly believed in India that the mongoose, while fighting snakes, chews the root of the Ophiorhiza mungos (regarded as an antidote for snake bites,) and that it is thus rendered immune. Scientists, however, say that its success in contests with snakes is due to its agility.

A few years ago the mongoose was imported into the island of Jamaica to see what the animal would do toward the extermination of sugar-cane rats. Before long the island numbered thousands of them; the rats were practically exterminated, but nevertheless crops were found to be ravaged. Like conditions obtained in Porto Rico and the Hawaiian Islands, where the mongoose had been tried as an experiment. Not long ago the United States government sent scientists to investigate. It has been found that the mongoose includes in its work of extermination the birds that live on crop-destroying insects.

"The result is," said Dr. Palmer, "that the devastation of the crops caused by the insect pests in some sections of these islands where no birds survive has been almost complete."

The mongoose lives in holes in the ground, and is nocturnal in its ways. Being quick and cautious, it is extremely difficult to shoot or trap it.

Recently Dr. Flexner, the eminent toxicologist of the University of Pennsylvania, imported two mongooses for the purpose of experimenting upon them with poisonous snakes. He was confronted by the government's order, but the scientists of the Department of Agriculture wished, if possible, to have the experiments conducted. It was agreed that the professor's laboratory should be guarded by a Federal keeper. To convey them safely from the steamer, he chloroformed them, and when he arrived at his laboratory found them dead.

In Jamaica, Porto Rico and Hawaii, however, the mongoose has sturdily and craftily resisted all efforts made by scientists and hunters to conquer him. The animal is exceedingly wary, evading the most cunningly-devised traps. The mongoose seems to know thoroughly the baits and nesting places of birds, and it will frequently kill and devour scores of them in a single night. The Department of Agriculture has abundantly demonstrated the benefit conferred upon husbandry by birds that feed on insect pests, and therefore every effort will be maintained to keep out the bird-destroying mongoose.

"Because of this unqualified embargo placed upon the animal," said Dr. Palmer, "the mongoose is attracting world-wide attention, particularly among scientists, who have hitherto known little about it."

On the continent of America there are but three or four mongooses (the plural of mongoose is not mongeese,) and they are confined in zoölogical gardens under the strict espionage of the government officials. There is one at the National Zoölogical Park in this city, and over its cage has been erected a placard announcing that further importation of this kind will be a serious infraction of the Federal law. A number of scientists have made journeys hither for the express purpose of studying this animal.

The importation into the United States of the flying fox (Pteropus rubicollis,) the largest mammal that flies, and a ruthless harvester of fruits and vegetables, is also prohibited. The flying fox, or fruit bat, is a native of the islands of the eastern archipelago.

The English sparrow continues, of course, on the black list, but the exclusion law in this case is rather tardy, for the objectionable bird is multiplying at an enormous rate, and spreading throughout the country.

The starling, a bird allied to the crow family, is either killed by the customs officials or returned at the expense of the owner.

Many new varieties of birds and animals are being discovered in the Philippines, and upon the recommendation of the scientists of the biological survey these are being held at ports of entry until it can be determined whether their advent would be detrimental or beneficial to American farming interests.

A number of birds, reptiles and mammals, such as swans, wild doves, alligators, tortoises, elephants, armodillos, sea lions, rhinoceroses, panthers, sloths, tapirs, ocelots, etc., may be imported without permit.

"It is not the desire of the Treasury Department or the Department of Agriculture unnecessarily to restrict importations of animals and birds desired for exhibitions in museums," said Dr. Palmer, "except as regards a few varieties which are such a menace that their escape from menageries or zoölogical gardens might work inconceivable ruin upon agriculture. In the case, therefore, of the mongoose, the starling, the flying fox, and the English sparrow, we insist upon absolute exclusion, and unqualified detention in the case of such birds and animals whose habits have not been determined. We expect that the investigation concerning birds and animals from the Philippines will result in important contributions to science." B. P. S.

FEARFUL EXPERIENCE AT SEA.

AN EXTRAORDINARY FEAT PERFORMED OFF THE LABRADOR BANKS.

[Frank Leslie's Monthly:] An extraordinary feat of courage and coolness was performed by John Clements, who was cast away in a dory only last summer off the Labrador Banks. On July 21, when the schooner Protector was just beyond the Straits of Belle Isle, Clements and George Johnston, another of the crew, were out in a dory together. The fog shut down suddenly, and shut them off from their ship. They rowed about for hours, trying to find her, as there were no other craft in that region, and land was thirty miles away. When night came on they determined to make for the coast before the polar current swept them south. They were without food and water, and the ocean was filled with icebergs.

The morning came at last, with a bright sun and breeze, and they set sail for a few hours. But a storm followed, and by nightfall the boat was half full of water, and lying to a drag, the rain pouring down, and both men bailing their hardest. As the third night approached without sight of land, Johnston lost heart, and abandoned the oars. Clements held on until his mate became delirious, and threatened to jump overboard.

Then Clements, being the stronger, overpowered Johnston, and tied him up in the bottom of the boat, an operation which, from theird struggles, nearly swamped her. After daybreak Clements got out the oars again, and at noon reached the shore, landing in a little cove. Here he found a brook that gave Johnson a refreshing draft, besides a meal of fresh roots and berries. This restored the latter, and Clements cut him loose. Then they started to coast south, and in the afternoon were picked up by a Newfoundland schooner.

THE SUGAR WE USE.

More than five billion pounds of sugar, valued at over $100,000,000, was brought into the United States in the fiscal year just ended. This is a larger importation of sugar than in any preceding year in the history of the country. The total number of pounds of sugar brought into America during the year was, as shown by the records of the Department of Commerce and Labor, 5,217,077,064, while in no earlier year in the history of the country has the importation of sugar ever reached five billion pounds.

The largest importation in any earlier year was that of 1897, when the total was 4,918,905,733 pounds. Adding to the enormous importation of 1903, 000,000,000 pounds as the domestic production, would give a total sugar supply of 5,817,000,000 pounds for the year, or sufficient to furnish an average of seventy-two pounds for each individual in the United States, estimating the present population at eighty millions.

The record of sugar importations for the year differs materially in certain aspects from that of earlier years. The total importation of beet sugar during the year was only 87,000,000 pounds, against 255,000,000 in the fiscal year 1902, and 963,000,000 in the fiscal year 1901. Cane sugar, of course, composed the remainder, and the cane sugar importations of the fiscal year, exclusive of that brought from Porto Rico and the Hawaiian Islands, amounted to 4,075,000,000 pounds, against 2,685,000,000 in the fiscal year 1902, and 2,956,000,000 in 1901. From Porto Rico the total sugar brought into the United States amounted to 226,143,503 pounds, valued at $7,466,579, and from the Hawaiian Islands, 774,825,420 pounds, valued at $25,310,634. Thus the total quantity of sugar supplied by Porto Rico and the Hawaiian Islands amounted to one billion pounds, or about one-fifth of the total brought into the country, its value being nearly $33,000,000. It would seem that as a nation we are fond of sweetmeats.—[Harper's Weekly.

USEFUL SPIDERS.

A French savant points out that spiders' webs improve the acoustic properties of a room. He says he knew in England a hall that was ideal for the conveyance of sound. In an evil moment it was decided to clean the ceilings, and all the spiders were dislodged. The hall was ruined as a place for speaking. The savant suggested that cotton strings might be hung loosely across ceilings to improve the sound-carrying properties of the room.

A Unique People.

THE PUEBLO INDIANS AND THEIR CURIOUS CUSTOMS.

By a Special Contributor.

THE most unique figure in America today, and the most striking ethnologic figure in the world, is the Pueblo Indian of the Southwest. As an Indian he is a paradox; as a human he is unique in the whole world. He is the one racial man who enjoys two religions, irreconcilable yet reconciled.

Before the Spaniards forced their religion upon these people, the Pueblos had the sun for their god, and worshiped the sun as such. They had periodical assemblages of the authorities and the people in the estufas for offering prayers to the sun, to supplicate him to repeat his diurnal visits, and to continue to make the maize, beans, and squashes grow for the sustenance of the people.

wardly practice the Catholic religion, but never to renounce our own."

There are old men in the pueblos whose duty it is to impart the traditions of the people to the rising generation. These traditions are communicated to the young men according to their ages and capacities to receive them. The Pueblo Indians will always follow and practice, as they do, both religions.

Before the coming of the Spaniards, the religion of the Pueblos was the Montezuma religion. A principal feature of this religion was the celebration of dances at the pueblos. In it God was the sun. Seh-un-yuh was the land the Pueblos came from, and to it they went when dead. This country (Seh-un-yuh) was at Great Salt Lake. They cannot say whether this lake was the Great Salt Lake of Utah, but it was to the north. Under this great lake there was a big Indian pueblo. The Indian dances were had only when prescribed by the cacique. The Sun, Moon and Stars were gods, of which the greatest and most potent was the Sun. But greater than he was Montezuma. A Wedding Occasion.

As we neared the pueblo on the morning of the 4th, we heard a loud beating of tom-toms, clanging of bells, and firing of guns coming to us from across the sands in the direction of the village. Pulling our wagon up beside the little adobe chapel on the outskirts of the pueblo, we found a motley crowd gathered there; leather-skinned Pueblo Indians in their oriental dress, long black hair and painted cheeks, Mexican girls with their faces plastered with powder, through which their dark skins shone in places like the spots on a leopard, looking for all the world as if they had just emerged from a flour sack; cowboys and miners with belted waist and turned-up sleeves; Indian children, nude with the exception of a breech cloth or a short shirt; city dudes in white collars and patent leathers, all gathered in a throng about the door of the little church. At one side stood an Indian beating furiously on a huge drum, while on the roof gaily-bedecked Indians took turns at clanging on the chapel bell. On inquiring of a padre standing near, we were informed of the fact that nine Indian weddings were to take place in the church at the start of the day's ceremonies. Even as we talked, there was a loud blowing of a trumpet in the hands of a stalwart Indian at the church entrance, at which the clanging of the bell and firing of the guns broke out with renewed energy.

We entered the church and found ourselves in a long, narrow, dungeon-like room, without seats with the exception of a narrow projection running around the walls. Mexicans, and a nondescript throng were squatting on the floor, while at the farther end around the altar were gathered the young swains with their brides-to-be. The maidens were wrapped closely in gaily-colored shawls, and each one held in her hand two candles. The padre stood in the pulpit, and by his side the interpreter. The interpreter collected a silver wedding fee from each groom-to-be in a tray; the padre read the wedding ceremony, which the interpreter repeated for the benefit of the Indians who cannot speak Spanish, and to which the candidates responded in a mumbling tone.

After the candidates for marriage had been pronounced man and wife, mass was held in the chapel, followed by the wedding procession through the pueblo. We were told that two weeks previous to this public ceremony, the original form of Pueblo marriage was carried out, thus fulfilling the requirements of their religion.

We followed the wedding procession into the pueblo, and a scene of gaiety and unusual activity greeted us. The streets were crowded with wagons and human beings arrayed in all the colors of the rainbow; while the roofs of the houses were lined with Indians in gaily-colored blankets, looking stolidly on. In the plaza, which had been kept clear of people and vehicles of all kinds in preparatory for the dance, a brush shed had been erected. In this shed was a platform, on which stood an image of the Indian's god.

Undesirable Ceremonies.

Presently we heard an uproar at the lower end of the plaza, and the most hideous and awe-inspiring figures came into view. Six Indians, nude with the exception of a breech cloth, one leg painted green and the other encircled with green bands, their naked bodies, arms, and legs covered with hideous designs in green and red, their long black hair gathered in a bunch on the top of their heads, in which were fastened spruce twigs, with spruce twigs fastened in their breech cloths and on their arms, came racing up the plaza, giving vent to the most unearthly screeches ever heard outside of a zoological garden. Arriving at the entrance to the brush hut, they stopped and gathered in a bunch, uttering yells and screeches in perfect rhythm, keeping time with their hands, for all the world like a crowd of college students giving their college yell. Then they marched, six abreast, down the plaza, stamping their feet, shaking their heads and hands as if at an imaginary foe; pirouetting on one foot and keeping time to their melancholy chant. We got our camera out, and were promptly set upon by an Indian carrying a long pole, who informed us in Spanish that we must put our camera away or get out of the pueblo. We informed him that we were willing to pay for the privilege, but as far as the Indian is to bribe, on this day he would not yield to any amount. This is their religion, and it must be held sacred. After much altercation and entreaty, and the appearance of other Indians carrying long poles, we decided it advisable to banish the camera for the time being. After this, all through the dance, we disguised the camera in a blanket and used it for a seat. We gave a guard a dollar to smuggle us onto the church roof with the camera, but were promptly hustled down by other guards, and had trouble getting the dollar back.

Now a scene of activity was noticed on the roof of the council chamber. This council chamber has no opening except through the roof, a mud stairway leading up to it. Indian women, clad in short skirts, with arms and legs bare, and decorated with twigs of spruce, appeared on the roof and marched down to the plaza, where they were joined by the men. Old men beating drums and surrounded by other gaily-bedecked Indians, came out of the council chamber and joined the throng in the plaza. There were now about three hundred Indians in the throng.

The old men, probably the council, gathered about the man with the drum, the dancers, women and men, mostly bare to the waist, moved to the right and to the left forming a cross, the old man struck the drum, at which the Indians started a low chant, lifting one foot then the other, and the dance was on, led by the hideous creatures with the green legs.

The chant rose and fell with the drum, the dancers varying their movements accordingly. All the dancers, except the "green legs" maintained a perfect form, keeping time to the chant, pausing when it paused, increasing their movements when it grew louder, moving in and out, pirouetting first on one foot then on the other. The green legged creatures deployed about the outskirts of the dancers, dashing hither and yon, yelling like demons. Now they laughed and cavorted as if over a victory. Again it was a slow melancholy dirge as if in mourning, but always in unison, and always in keeping with the sound of the drum and the chant of the choir surrounding it. Now and then a creature in green legs would dash to one side of the plaza toward the spectators and returned laughing victoriously as if after capturing an enemy. If you happened to be in the crowd with a camera hidden on your person at the time a "green leg" dashed in your direction uttering his hideous laugh, you would feel something rising under your hat.

Now the dancers formed in line facing each other, moved forward and back, broke up into groups, formed again in line and moved slowly up the plaza toward the brush house. Women appeared in the throng of spectators bearing curiously shaped loaves of bread, chickens, meat, grain, vegetables, etc. These they gave to the dancers as they passed; the dancers, on arriving at the entrance to the brush house containing the image, passed inside and laid these offerings before the image. This is a supplication to the god they know best, to keep them supplied with the necessaries of life.

The dancers repaired to the acequia at the outskirts of the pueblo. On the banks of the acequia the same movements were gone through as had taken place in the plaza. These were supplications for water. If you happen to be in the throng of spectators, you will offer up a few supplications for water yourself, as the water in the acequia is not fit for a civilized being to drink, and the heat is intense.

Now back to the plaza, where the dance is continued. The dancers' nude bodies are covered with a lather of perspiration. Such unswerving devotion to religion is not known to civilization. The dance continues all through the day midst intense heat, stopping when the sun goes down.

Underground Ceremonies.

This is the portion of their religious ceremonies which take place in public. Other ceremonies take place in the dark recesses of the underground kivas or lodge rooms, to which the outsider is not admitted. For days previous to the public dances, preparations are going on in these kivas. At Taos pueblo they have a curious custom which has always been observed. It is for some one to exclude himself entirely from the outer world, abstaining absolutely from all personal communication with others, and devoting himself solely to prayer for the pueblo and its inhabitants. This seclusion lasts eighteen months, during which he is furnished daily with a little food, just enough to preserve life, and during which he may not even inquire about his wife or children. The food the recluse is permitted to use is corn, beans, squashes, and deer meat; that is, such food as was used before the coming of the Spaniard. This religious seclusion is in honor of the sun.

The Pueblos are a devout people. Their worship must go far beyond the forms of mere ritualism into the demonstrative. Hence it is that they celebrate everything by ceremonial dances and forms. But these ceremonies are not empty forms to them. More unswerving devotion, more earnestness and intensity of spirit, it is not possible to conceive of. And who will say that the God of the Christians, seeing the desires of these earnest but misguided people, will not reward them openly for their devotion to the God they know best?

THE CHARMING YOUNG MISS VANDERBILT.

To prevent Miss Gladys Vanderbilt growing too fond of the gay life in Newport, her mother has packed up and they have gone to Mrs. Alfred Vanderbilt's camp in the North woods. Now that Miss Gladys will be the bridesmaid of Miss Gladys Brooks, her childhood days are over. Everyone says she has more spirit and dash than her sister, Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, or either of her three brothers. She is not a beauty, nor would she be called modish. She dresses plainly, but wherever she goes she attracts attention. Her mother is insistent that Gladys remain a child for two years more, at least. Mrs. Vanderbilt announces the coming-out party for 1905.

The other night when Miss Vanderbilt's name was mentioned, a woman said: "She is really the jolliest girl you can imagine. I crossed the ocean with her a year or so ago, and she was the favorite of everyone aboard ship. She displeased her mother a hundred times by her amusing pranks. You should have heard Mrs. Vanderbilt say: 'Gladys, please be dignified.' But Gladys was more than dignified—she was charming."—[New York Press.

EDISON'S IDEAS ON RADIUM.

HE THINKS HE HAS SOLVED A PROBLEM THAT HAS PUZZLED SCIENTISTS.

[Harper's Weekly:] Thomas A. Edison has evolved and announced a theory which he believes solves the problem that has been puzzling scientists ever since the discovery made My Mme. Curie of the peculiar properties of radium and the kindred substances, uranium and thorium. The phenomenon presented by these substances, as is generally known, is their apparent property of giving off actinic rays of peculiar chemical properties, somewhat similar to the Roentgen rays, without any apparent loss of energy or bulk. Based on these observed phenomena, several new theories of matter have been put forward, all of which accept as a fact the apparent origin of the energy within the substances themselves.

Mr. Edison's theory eliminates this contradiction of accepted natural laws, and indicates the possibility that the energy emitted by radium is merely reflected, as it were, from some unknown source.

"I have made extensive experiments with the Roentgen ray and with radium," said Mr. Edison to a representative of Harpers' Weekly, "and have come to the conclusion that these new substances are not the sources of energy, but are rendered fluorescent by the action of some hitherto undetected ether vibration or ray. Just as the Roentgen ray and the Herzian wave remained undreamed of for centuries after the phenomena of sound, light and heat were well understood, so it is not only possible but extremely probable that there are other rays in the immense gamut from sound to ultra-violet which we have not yet discovered. In my own experiments I have found that the ordinary electric arc, when raised to an extremely high temperature, gives off a ray which renders oxalate of lithium highly fluorescent. In the same way the Roentgen ray renders platinum-baryum-cyanide, tungstate of calcium, and cupro-cyanide of potassium highly fluorescent—that is, the X-ray sets up in these substances a condition of activity which results in the emission from them of actinic rays and a small amount of heat.

"My theory of radio-activity is that the rays which the new elements emit are set up in the same way, the substances being rendered fluorescent by some form of ether vibration which is undoubtedly all-pervading, but has not yet been isolated or measured, and which may have some extra-planetary origin. To accept any other theory is to declare one's belief in perpetual motion, in getting something for nothing.

"It is not at all strange that only two or three substances have yet been found which exhibit this phenomenon, as there are only three substances known which are rendered fluorescent by the Roentgen ray. It is a peculiar coincidence, moreover, that the only one of the known fluorescent substances that is ever found in its natural state, tungstate of calcium, is always more or less closely associated with pitchblende, from which all the radium so far made has been extracted.

"I believe this theory is capable of proof, but I shall be content to let some one else prove it. I am through for all time with experiments in radio-activity. Two of my assistants have been maimed for life by their close association with the Roentgen rays, and I myself have one eye badly out of focus and am suffering from severe stomach disturbances from the same cause. The new dark-room laboratory which I have just completed for such experiments will remain unusued, or be converted to some other use."

IN THE ATTIC.

Up in the attic where mother goes
Is a trunk in a shadowed nook—
A trunk—and its lid she will oft unclose
As if it were a precious book.
She kneels at its side on the attic boards
And tenderly, soft and slow,
She counts all the treasures she fondly hoards—
The things of the long ago.

A yellowing dress, once the sheerest white
That shimmered in joyous pride—
She looks at it now with the girl's delight
That was hers when she stood a bride.
There is a ribbon of faded blue
She keeps with the satin gown;
Buckles and lace—and a little shoe;
Sadly she lays that down.

One lock of hair that is golden still
With the gold of the morning sun;
Yes, and a dollie with frock and frill—
She lifts them all, one by one.
She lifts them all to her gentle lips
Up there in the afternoon;
Sometimes the rain from the eave trough drips
Tears with her quavered croon.

Up in the attic where mother goes
Is a trunk in a shadowed place—
A trunk—with the scent of a withered rose
On the satin and shoe and lace.
None of us touches its battered lid,
But safe in its niche it stays
Sacred to all that her heart has hid—
Gold of the other days.

Macedonia.

THE SITUATION AND ITS TERRIBLE POSSIBILITIES.

Correspondence London Leader.

ALTHOUGH Sofia affects surprise at the renewed activity of the insurgent bands in Macedonia, and claims to regard the movement as local and premature, few persons will be found in Turkey, and none certainly in the disturbed provinces themselves, to indorse this comfortable opinion. On the contrary, the revolutionary leaders, who have never made and secret of their intentions, and have openly published their programme far and wide, stated in it in so many words that they intended to call a truce for the purpose of garnering the harvest, after which they would show Europe and the world to what extremes they were prepared to go in order to attain their end. Today harvesting is practically over throughout all the Balkan countries. When I left Macedonia nigh a month back the crops had nearly all been already got in, and when a week ago I passed through Bulgaria on my way from Constantinople to Flushing, I found the wide, rich grain-yielding plains everywhere reaped so far as my field glasses could carry vision. Thus, so far from this recrudescence of insurrection being premature, it is but the execution of a part of the plans drawn up by the Bulgarian organizers, who set about their bloodshed, their dynamite outrages and bomb throwing with all the orderliness of bank clerks. Nor, assuredly, can the movement be described as local.

Scene of the Rising.

Probably but few persons in these islands have had occasion to study the geography of the three Turkish provinces—Salonica, Monastir, and Cossovo—that go to make up what is termed Macedonia, and the newspaper reader who finds in the same telegram reports of outrages, conflicts, encounters, blowing up of railway bridges, and throwing of bombs at Uskub, Dibra, Istip, Banitza, Castoria, Ostrova, Serres and Vardar, is not to be blamed if he gleans the impression that these different places are more or less "all under a hat," instead of being many miles apart, and representative of each of the three provinces. From Dibra to Serres, for instance, is some two hundred miles, as the crow flies, and from Istip to Castoria, or from Krushevo to Salonica, over one hundred. It must thus be fairly recognized that the movement, which is daily gathering strength, is very general. It is, indeed, difficult to overestimate the extreme gravity of the situation. The avowed and determined intention of the revolutionary organizers is to render existence practically impossible throughout Macedonia—to all classes of the community—high or low, rich or poor, irrespective of race, creed or nationality. They are, they say, warring not only against the Turks, but against society at large, with the set purpose of inducting such a state of affairs as must force "Europe" to intervene, though how the intervention is to be operated is not apparently their concern.

Trying the Turks.

Of course, they desire, as they admit, so to stir up Turkish feeling as to bring about massacres of Christians by Moslems. But this is merely as a means to the end, and because they know that when Turks begin to massacre they surround their slaughter with every circumstance of atrocity. I think it quite likely that they will succeed in carrying out this dreadful purpose. At present, and during the past trying months, the Turks, one and all, authorities, troops, and populace, have behaved with admirable temper in circumstances of grave provocation. Their demeanor, indeed—save in one or two isolated cases—such as that of Smerdesh, near Monastir (where admittedly they wrought horrors among unoffending villagers)—has called forth eulogy from the foreign representatives and from all European residents. But this temper will not last forever. The Turkish troops in Macedonia—a very large force—are all Asiatics, and are drawn from the three classes of reservists—the Redif, Mustafaz and Ilaven. They are not paid, they are mostly ill-clad, and in very many cases they had to join the colors, leaving their fields unsown. They know, therefore, that their families are very near starvation, and that the coming winter will be most bitter to them. And thanks to the tireless activity of the bands, they are being worked off their feet, and get no rest, day or night. It is not too much to say that we are getting perilously near to that time of massacre and atrocity which M. Sarafoff and his associates are anxious to bring about. As for those gentlemen, the leaders and organizers of the insurrection, it is impossible, if one leaves aside the moralities of the question (which it is not my purpose to discuss here,) not to admire their audacity, their bravery and their steadfastness of purpose. They are no chamber leaders, these men; they never spare themselves, and they are as untiring as they are brave, and if they call on their followers to lay down their lives, they risk their own every bit as freely.

Concerning the Leader.

Sarafoff, whom I regard as being the real head and front of the whole movement, is in every way a remarkable man, and would almost seem to bear a charmed life. In one disguise or another he travels all over Macedonia, and there has hardly ever been any big affair during the past two years in which he has not played an active part. During the eight months spent by his agents in mining the Ottoman Bank, and (as we shall find before long,) other buildings in Salonica, he was frequently in the town superintending the works, and on the night of the explosion he was directing operations in the streets—disguised as a Turkish police commissary. A queer thing connected with M. Sarafoff's visits to Salonica was that we all knew of them—as I must suppose did the Turks. On one occasion not very long since, I said to Sir Alfred Billiotti (our Consul-General:) "Is it true that Sarafoff is still here?" "Possibly," was the reply; "but he was to have left on Thursday night."

Certainly M. Sarafoff has imbued his followers with much of the spirit that animates his own stout heart. I have been present at several fights between Turkish troops and bands of Committagees, and have seen the way these insurgents met death. I was present at the trial of the three young Bulgars convicted of blowing up the bank, and the SS. Guadalquiver, and of throwing bombs in the streets of Salonica, and I heard the death sentence read to them. They numbered only 70 years between them, and they heard their sentence without the quiver of an eyelid. I have noted the same demeanor among Armenians arraigned for conspiracy during the atrocity period of '95-'96 in Asia Minor. "Where do you belong?" the judge would ask the prisoner, standing chained before him. "Mezarlika," was the unvarying answer. "To the cemetery."

This spirit, indeed, it is that makes the real seriousness of the insurrectionary movement in Macedonia, for when men, as do all these, not merely think of their lives as possibly forfeit, but deliberately regard themselves as already dead from the moment they join the cause, there is hardly any limit to be set to their possibilities of achievement.

Logan's Famous Speech.

THOMAS JEFFERSON'S CONFIRMATION OF ITS GENUINENESS.

From a Special Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1.—"In speaking of the animals of America, the theory of M. De Buffon, the Abbé Raynal and others presented itself for consideration," wrote Thomas Jefferson. "They have supposed that there is something in the soil, climate and other circumstances in America, which occasions animal nature to degenerate, not excepting even man, native or adoptive, physical or moral. This theory, so unfounded, and degrading to one-third of the globe, was called to the bar of fact and reason."

That such a theory had ever been advanced by civilized and educated persons was news to the writer, but it is contained in an old publication which was recently handed to the correspondent by a delver in Congressional Library lore, one who delights in studying minute details of history. The pamphlet is somewhat worn and somewhat faded, manifesting antiquity, and it contains Jefferson's letter dated at Philadelphia, December 31, 1797, with a great deal of interesting and valuable matter upon a historical topic.

In the years 1781 and 1782 Jefferson compiled his "Notes on Virginia for the information of the secretary of the legation of France to this country." A few copies were published in Paris in the year 1784, and given to particular friends. In the letter quoted, Jefferson says: "Combating in these notes, the contumelious theory of certain European writers, whose celebrity gave currency and weight to their opinions, that our country, from the combined effects of soil and climate, degenerated animal nature in general, and particularly the moral faculties of man, I considered the speech of Logan as an apt proof of the contrary, and used it as such; and I copied verbatim the narrative I had taken down in 1774, and the speech as it had been given us in a better translation by Lord Dunmore."

It seems that the genuineness and authenticity of a since celebrated speech by Logan, the bereaved Indian, which Mr. Jefferson had published with the purpose thus disclosed, had been questioned. The speech has been published in school books for more than a century, and here is Jefferson's account of its origin: "As soon as I found that the story of Logan could be doubted, I determined to inquire into it as accurately as the testimony remaining, after a lapse of twenty-odd years would permit, and that the result should be made known either in the first new edition which should be printed of the 'Notes on Virginia,' or by publishing an appendix.

"I had only concurred with thousands and thousands of others in believing a transaction on authority which merited respect. The story of Logan is only repeated in the 'Notes,' precisely as it had been current for more than a dozen years before they were published."

Here is a brief history of Logan. His name was Tahgah-jute. He was the son of a Cayuga chief, and assumed the name of Logan to do honor to his friend, the acting Governor of Pennsylvania. He lived in Pennsylvania, and on the Virginia frontier from 1730 to 1770, when he removed to the shores of the Ohio with his family. He was a brave chief, of noble presence, always friendly to the white people, and endeared himself to them by his many noble qualities and sturdy friendship. He was favored (?) with unlimited quantities of whisky, and became very intemperate, but was always as harmless and gentle a vagabond as Rip Van Winkle. In 1774 marauding bands of white men assassinated every member of Logan's family. This cruel and villainous deed aroused Logan to deeds of vengeance upon the entire white race. He stimulated the tribes to make war upon the whites by telling them pathetically the story of his bereavement, and he became the successful leader of a savage warfare lasting six years. There were terrible cruelties, in all of which Logan was preëminent. He is reputed to have taken upward of thirty scalps with his own knife.

The Indians were finally defeated, but Logan disdained to sue for peace with the other chiefs. Instead of any act of submission, he sent to Lord Dunmore, Governor of Virginia, an address of marvelous eloquence and pathos, as follows: "I appeal to any white man to say if he ever entered Logan's cabin, hungry, and he gave him not meat; if he ever came, cold and naked, and he clothed him not. During the course of the last long and bloody war Logan remained idle in his cabin, an advocate for peace. Such was my love for the whites, that my countrymen pointed as they passed, and said, 'Logan is the friend of the white men.' I had even thought to have lived with you, but for the injuries of one man. Cresap, the last spring, in cold blood and unprovoked, murdered all of the relations of Logan, not even sparing my women and children. There runs not a drop of my blood in the veins of any living creature. This called on me for revenge. I have sought it. I have killed many. I have fully glutted my vengeance. For my country I rejoice at the beams of peace. But do not harbor the thought that mine is the joy of fear. Logan never felt fear. He will not turn on his heel to save his life. Who is there to mourn for Logan? No one!"

Mr. Jefferson says: "That anybody questioned this speech was never suspected by me till I saw the letter of Mr. Martin in a Baltimore paper. I remembered that Gen. Gibson was still living, and knew that he had been the tranalator of the speech. I wrote him immediately. He, in answer, declares to me that he was the very person sent by Lord Dunmore to the Indian town; that after he had delivered the message there, Logan took him out to a neighboring wood, sat down with him, and rehearsing with tears the catastrophe of his family, gave him that speech for Lord Dunmore, translated by for him; that he has turned to it in the cyclopdia as taken from the 'Notes on Virginia,' and finds that it was his translation I had used with only two or three verbal variations of no importance. This establishes that the speech of Logan is genuine, and, that being established, it is Logan himself who is the author of all the important facts."

Mr. Jefferson was accused of publishing an unwarranted attack upon Col. Cresap by publishing the speech of Logan. Concerning this, Mr. Jefferson says that if he can find that an error was made by Logan, he will disseminate that fact, but concludes: 'If I find that Logan was right in his charge, I will vindicate, as far as my suffrage may go, the truth of a chief whose talents and misfortunes have attached to him the respect and commiseration of the world."

The affidavit of Gen. John Gibson, who received the Logan address and gave it to Lord Dunmore, is sworn to, April 4, 1800, at Pittsburgh, Pa., before Jen Barbe, a justice of the peace. Gen. Gibson avows that Capt. Cresap endeavored with him to prevail upon a marauding party of white men to desist from their purpose to attack the Indians on Yellow Creek. This exonerates Capt. Cresap from Logan's charge. He fixes the authorship of the Logan address in the following words:

"At the request of Lord Dunmore this deponent went in, and Logan, the Indian, came to where this deponent was sitting with Cornstalk, and other chiefs of Shawnees, and asked him to walk out with him. That they went into a copse of wood and sat down, when Logan, after shedding abundance of tears, delivered him the speech, nearly as related by Mr. Jefferson in his 'Notes on Virginia;' that this deponent on his return to camp delivered the speech to Lord Dunmore."

An extract of a letter from Col. Eben Zane is printed. Col. Zane tells in details the disorders preceding the murders, and concludes: "I must do Capt. Cresap the justice to say that I do not believe he was present at the killing of Indians at Yellow Creek."

There are other letters and affidavits which all tend to incriminate Capt. Cresap, showing that he was in the vicinity of the murders, which were committed by men under his command. But the authenticity of Logan's address is established, and that was Mr. Jefferson's principal desire. Accompanying the aged pamphlet containing these interesting facts is a crude map showing the locality of the atrocious crime which caused the subsequent deaths of so many innocent white people, in a war which concluded with Logan's pathetically eloquent: "Who is there to mourn for Logan? No one!"

RADIUM AND CREATION.

And, if radium does undermine the time-honored theory of the conservation of energy, it is an intimation of things which are precious to philosophy, if not to practical life. The conservation of energy shuts us up in a box, into which nothing new can enter, from which nothing can escape. Among other things which are thus shut out, or in, is the Creator Himself. But the Creator is infinite; how can He be enclosed or excluded? The destruction of the conservation of energy theory would discredit that other great creed of the last century—the alleged truth of evolution. Man would not have been evolved, through interminable continuous processes, from the protoplasmic cell; but each successive order in nature would be distinctly created, without continuity. There would be some—and that the characteristic—thing or principle in each step of the series which had not been in the series up to that time. And the Creator, consequently, would be relieved from the present charge of having set a machine going in the beginning which has been running ever since without His interference, leaving Him to amuse Himself otherwise or not at all, and He would be shown in a state of constant and infinite activity.—[Julian Hawthorne, in September Booklovers Magazine.

MUSICAL SCALE OF DEATH AND LIFE.

By sounding a certain note on a tuning fork, it is asserted that mosquitoes may be violently attracted toward the sound, and by rigging up a screen through which an electric current can be sent they may be slaughtered wholesale. There can be nothing unique or unprecedented in the organism of the mosquito; all animals, and even all material objects, are probably responsive to certain musical sounds. If this be so, nothing but a series of carefully-conducted experiments lies between us and the discovery of the "key-note" of any given thing or creature. It is well known that a note from a singer's throat may cause a wine glass to fall in fragments. Certain harmonies powerfully affect certain human beings. Dogs howl at certain musical passages; and there are many cognate instances. There are hints which should be resolutely and keenly followed up. It may be that death and life (within limits) lie between the extremes of the musical scale.—[Julian Hawthorne, in September Booklovers Magazine.

It is true that geniuses have been at work for more than a hundred years in the evolution of the typewriter, but the credit of constructing the first practical machine is, unquestionably, due to Thomas Hall, of New York, who made the first machine that would print at the will and touch of an operator. The oldest of the machines in use today, the oldest that anybody living knows anything about, was not patented until June 23, 1868, nearly a year and a half after the letter above referred to was written. The Finished Machine.

Three months prior to the completion of the machine, Mr. Buell secured my services to operate and exhibit it. With this end in view, Mr. Hall made a dummy keyboard, upon which I practiced for nearly three months, and upon which I became so proficient that, when the machine was completed, I found no difficulty in attaining a high rate of speed, and could produce typewritten matter faster than the fastest penman could write, with greater contrast in readableness in favor of the machine.

Nobody Naturally Wanted One.

Upon completion, the machine was immediately shown to capitalists. For several weeks it was at the office of John Pondir, at the School of Mines, in Exchange Place, New York, where many of the Wall-street magnates called to see it. It was next taken to the office of the New York Independent, in Beekman street, a newspaper owned by Henry C. Bowen, one of the greatest "financiers" and controllers of capital in New York city at that time. Here the machine was visited by publishers, literary men and others, all of whom declared it to be a wonderful invention, but none of whom could see any practical use for it. We did book a few orders from men who absolutely needed it, for instance, the great American statesman and journalist, Horace Greeley, whose writing was notoriously so poor that but one man in the whole world could read it, and he a compositor on the New York Tribune, who had made it his life study. Mr. Greeley said: "With one of these machines you write so that any person can read it, and I must have the first one made." Rev. Absalom Peters, an eminent divine of the metropolis, who had written so voluminously that he had paralyzed his right hand, after which he had learned to write with his left until it, too, became paralyzed, so that he could not write at all, found that, by placing one hand in the palm of the other and stiffening the finger of the gripped hand, he could strike the keys of the machine properly and commit what he wished to paper. He was simply delighted, and also wanted the first machine marketed, but did not live to enjoy the pleasures and utilities of one.

Regarded as Impractical.

Rev. Henry Ward Beecher was editing Mr. Bowen's Independent at the time of which I write, and saw the machine daily for some two weeks. He frequently tried it, but was of opinion that his thoughts were scattered while using it, and did not express himself as desirous of owning one or of becoming a stockholder in the corporation to manufacture it that we were trying to organize. Herbert Bowen, son of Henry C., now the well-known and much-talked-of Ex-Minister to Venezuela, and foreign arbitrator, was a clerk in the office of his father, and will remember the facts of which I write. For two weeks I directed the wrappers in which the Independent was mailed, work usually done by six girls, but all the use these girls could see for the machine was that it would throw five of them out of employment. The machine was also on exhibition at the office of George Francis Train, on Pine street, the best-known financier of that day, where his moneyed friends inspected thoroughly the workings of it, but neither he nor they invested.

The machine was next taken to Bridgeport, Ct., and exhibited to Elias Howe, Jr., the inventor of the sewing machine; to Wheeler & Wilson, Maj. Mallory, and other manufacturers there, but they were all inclined to look upon it more as a toy than as a useful invention. We next took it to Washington, D. C., showing it at the Treasury, Capitol, Government Printing Office, Gen. Benjamin F. Butler's residence and the Quartermaster-General's office, and it was finally placed on exhibition at Jay Cooke's bank, now the First National, where Mr. Huntington, Mr. Cooke's financial manager, made us at home in sumptuous quarters, and invited Senators, members of Congress and other distinguished and wealthy men to call and view it. Many of them did so, but none of them ever invested in it, and Mr. Hall and his machine met the fate of nearly every new and valuable invention.

NEW YORK, FEB. 13, 1867.

MISS SARAH E. VAIL,
HARTFORD, CONN.

DEAR SISTER:

I WOULD HAVE ANSWERED YOUR LETTER BEFORE BUT I HAVE BEEN WAITING FOR THE NEW PRINTING MACHINE TO BE DONE, SO THAT I COULD SEND YOU A PRINTED LETTER, THE FIRST ONE EVER WRITTEN ON A MACHINE, AND LET YOU SEE WHAT A NICE INVENTION IT IS. THE MACHINE WAS FINISHED DAY BEFORE YESTERDAY, AND I THEN OPERATED IT FOR THE FIRST TIME, BUT I HAVE BEEN PRACTICING ON A DUMMY KEYBOARD FOR SEVERAL MONTHS, IN ORDER TO HANDLE THIS CORRECTLY, AND WITH SPEED, AS SOON AS COMPLETED. THE MACHINE IS GOING TO THE PARIS EXPOSITION ON THE 20TH OF THIS MONTH, AND I EXPECT TO GO WITH IT, SO IF YOU DO NOT COME TO NEW YORK UNTIL AFTER MARCH FIRST I AM AFRAID YOU WON'T SEE ME.

WITH LOVE TO MOTHER I AM, YOUR BROTHER,
HENRY W. VAIL.

FIRST TYPEWRITTEN LETTER.

That this machine never was named, never became known on the market, and that Mr. Hall's name is not on everyone's tongue is no fault of Mr. Hall or of the machine. The facts are, the world was not ready for the innovation, and the field for female help in office was limited, while the idea of a man using one of those machines, unless he was a cripple, seemed to be undignified.

Fate of Mr. Hall's Machine.

The real reason why Mr. Hall's machine is unknown is because Mr. Buell was so sure of organizing a company with a capital of $1,000,000 to manufacture it, and becoming president of the company with a very large salary, to say nothing of profits on his stock, that he already imagined himself a millionaire, and conducted himself like one, living in luxury and spending money like a Croesus. The result was that, to have the money needed, he borrowed from every available source, gambled in stocks, hypothecated bonds and merchandise in his possession and care, until he was brought into court for one of his irregularities, which was of such a flagrant nature that, when he was momentarily released upon a technicality, he fled from the jurisdiction of the court and from the country, and has never been seen or heard from since. A rumor reached New York, soon after, that he had been drowned at Matamoras, Texas, but no proof of it was ever offered. I never saw or heard of this "first" machine after Mr. Buell's arrest, and do not know whether Messrs. Hall & McCune ever did or not, for I did not see either of them for many years afterward, but when I saw Mr. Hall, in 1897, he said that he had never been compensated in any way for his invention by any of the numerous manufacturers who had received patents subsequent to his.

In giving this history of the first perfected typewriter, it would not do to omit the mention of the fact that Miss Mary A. Hudson was the first woman who ever operated a typewriter. At the time of the invention and completion of Mr. Hall's machine, Miss Hudson was a saleswoman in the salesroom of the Florence Sewing Machine Company, in New York, and not only witnessed the birth of it, but operated it as soon as finished.

Mr. Hall's machine was in appearance similar to the Remington; that is, the type bars were arranged in a circle and the type struck in a common center, but there was no roller or platen, as on modern machines. The paper was placed under the machine on a flat carriage, which fed the space of a letter or character upon the stroke of each key, but each letter and character had a space of its own, not all were alike, as now. In this first machine all the letters were capitals, and there was no shift key.

The letter written by me, a photographic copy of which is appended, was never intended for publication, as the matter contained in it will show, but was a boy's letter to his sister, speaking only of personal matters, incidentally mentioning the date of the completion of the machine.

In 1897, upon the urgent request of Mr. Hall, to "try and find something," I had written on that first machine, I did find among the effects of my deceased mother this letter, which she had, evidently, treasured ever since its receipt by my sister.

A VOLCANIC OBELISK.

Extraordinary Formation as a Result of the Mont Pelee Eruption.

[Prof. Angelo Heilprin, in Science:] The strangest event connected with the recent activity of Mont Pelée, not even excepting its sensational annihilation of the city of St. Pierre, is doubtless that which is now taking place—the pushing forth from its summit of an enormous obelisk of polished rock as a cork is pushed from a soda-water bottle by the expanding gas within. The wonder is thus described in Science (August 7) by Prof. Angelo Heilprin. He says:

"Not the least remarkable of the many extraordinary conditions that have been associated with the recent eruptions of the Martinique volcano is the extrusion of the giant tower of rock, a veritable obelisk, which today dominates the mountain, and which has given to it an added height of 800 to 900 feet. Pelée is no longer 4200 or 4280 feet in elevation, but upward of 5000 feet. On May 31 last, before it lost 180 feet of its summit, it reached exactly 5200 feet. This tower of rock, the nature of which was first properly made known by Prof. Lacroix, issues directly, and to all intents and purposes vertically, from the summit of the new cone of the volcano (of whatever precise nature this cone may be) which had been built up in the ancient crateral basin (the Etang Sec) to a height of 1600 feet or more, and virtually plugs it. Where it is implanted, it has a thickness of some 300 to 350 feet. From certain points of view the obelisk seems to maintain for most of its height (800-|-feet) a fairly uniform thickness; from other points it shows a rapidly tapering surface, with a termination in a needle summit, a true aiguille. It is gently curved or arched toward the southwest or in the direction of St. Pierre, and on this face it is cavernous or openly slaggy, showing where successive and repeated explosions had carried away portions of the substance. On the opposite side, or toward the east-northeast, the surface appears solid, smoothed and even polished in part, and shows longitudinal parallel grooves and striae, very much like glacial markings. On this side it shows plainly the marks of hard attrition, the effect of rubbing upon the encasing rock—the mold, in fact, that determined a portion of the exit channel.

"The constitution of this extruded 'cork' is undeniably lava—a lava whose viscosity or rapid solidification did not permit it to flow over, but which under the giant stress of the volcano simply moved upward, solid from base to summit, and receiving accretions to its mass only from below. The most cursory examination of the relations existing would immediately point to this form of growth and development, but the carefully conducted angle measurements and observations of contour made by the representatives at two stations of the French Scientific Commission leave no possibility of doubt in the matter, and they further furnish us with data touching the rate of growth. Thus, in eight days preceding June 7 this growth was, as we are informed by M. Giraud, ten meters (33 feet;) and in the four days preceding June 15 (a period within the time of my recent visit to the volcano) it measured six meters (20 feet.) The consideration of the depth to which this giant monument descends solid into the volcano would be interesting were there any way of reaching the problem, but for the present there would seem to be none such.

"On June 12 last, in company with M. Guinolseau—one of the observers of the French Commission—I made the ascent of Pelée, and from the immediate crateur rim took a series of photographs of Pelée's singular process, probably the most impressive piece of nature that I had ever seen. The volcano, by comparison with what it had been before, had 'slumbered down to peace,' but yet it was too active to permit us to descend into the crateral hollow, 300 to 350 feet in depth, that still surrounded the new cone. Steam and sulphur were issuing everywhere, and avalanches of rock were repeatedly being disengaged from the obelisk. Pelée was still 'ugly,' and the night before, the southwest base of its crown or plug was glowing with fire—with the liquid lava that was rising in rift passages. Two days later I noted a feeble line of steam issuing from the absolute apex of the summit, suggesting continuous passage or channel extending from base to summit. On March 26 a discharge of incandescent balls was observed also to take place from the same position.

"Geologists will naturally make a comparison between the Pelée structure and that which was observed to rise in Georgios, in Santorin, in 1867; but the dome of the latter is probably nearer to the cone of Pelée, and suggests little of the obelisk and of its method of formation."

Cough in Lower Seven.

HEARD ON A TRAIN COMING FROM CHICAGO TO LOS ANGELES.

Contributed by Frank H. Spearman.

IT was in the smoking-room of a Pullman car en route to Los Angeles; we were talking about kickers.

"It is all right enough to kick," observed a traveling man, "I can kick when there's need of it. Still, there's one kind of kickers I don't take to—the fellows that kick too quick. This Coast trip I've made once a year now for twelve years. I'd rather give the house a thousand dollars any time than take it; but I can't get out of it, so I have to pound along over this alkali about once a year annually."

"You mean—every twelve months," suggester a lawyer, flipping his ash.

"Last time when I came through," continued the traveling man, ignoring the amendment, "we had a kicker in the car; a well-fed, bull-neck chap with side whiskers and bags and suit cases, and canes, and umbrellas, and golf clubs, and everything on earth a man doesn't need piled up all around him. He had section four, and I had five, so I got the benefit of the foreign tags on his luggage.

"We pulled out of Chicago about 11 o'clock that night. I turned in early, but of course there are always a lot of people that never get under way till the last minute, and they were going to bed all around me long after the train started. To make it worse, after we got past Aurora the porter fished every blamed thing I had in the way of baggage out from under my berth, and crawled around on his hands and knees till he had me as wide awake as a grasshopper, looking for somebody's handbag. He said a gen'man lost his bag, and it must be som'ers around under there. After he got me all stirred up and found nothing, he tackled the baggage of my bull-neck neighbor across the aisle. But that man wouldn't stand for it, not for a minute, and he bellowed at the porter till the boy was glad enough to get off with his life and let his traps alone.

"It was about half past twelve o'clock then. I thought I was going to manage some sleep and worked hard for an hour to get next to it, when all of a sudden No. 7, just ahead of me, began coughing. Cough! I never heard the beat of it in my life. It wasn't a loud cough, nor a hard one, but just a little miserable, aggravating hack that ran along in triplets, as regular as a foghorn. I turned on one side, and turned on the other; I tried my good ear up and my bad ear up; I stuck my head between the pillows; once I pulled the blanket over it. It wasn't a bit of use; that kind of a cough would go through a burglar-proof vault. There wasn't a soul in the car could sleep; I knew that perfectly well, because somebody was up and down all night except that cougher in No. 7. He never got up, nor let up, except when the train stopped, and when we took a fresh start he took a fresh start, and we chased along that way clear to the Missouri. Of course, when I saw the case was hopeless I gave up trying, and turned my attention to figuring up my expense account, and planning for an increase in salary this year—that I haven't got yet. So the night wore along; cough, cough, cough, and two or three times I heard the bull-neck man kicking like sixty about it to the porter. About daylight I did get one little nap, just enough to make me cross for all day.

"After breakfast, when all the car was made up, except No. 7, and we were talking across sections, the man with the golf clubs began telling what he thought of anybody that would keep a car full of passengers awake all night coughing. We hadn't heard a sound from No. 7 since daylight; and we wouldn't have known whether there was a man or woman behind the curtains, except for the derby hat hung up by the ventilator.

"'It's an imposition on the rights of passengers for a man to make a public nuisance of himself in any way,' asserted Bull-neck, talking across at me, good and loud, so No. 7 could hear it. 'And then,' he went on, 'after other folks have turned out without any sleep, he takes his good nap in the morning. Travelers that reserve space in a private car are entitled to the rest and comfort they pay for without disturbance. They wouldn't allow that sort of a thing anywhere but in the United States.'

"Just as he wound up No. 7 opened his curtains and put his feet down in the aisle. He was a young man, not a day over thirty, and all dressed, though his hair was tumbled a good deal and he looked tired. He pushed the curtains back both ways with his hands, and looked at the fellow in 4. For a minute he didn't say a word; you may be sure no one else did. He just looked at Golf-clubs a minute, and then he began, kind of low:

"'I'm the meanest man on earth, I know that. Just a miserable, low-down cur. You needn't have taken the pains to talk so loud while you were telling me what you thought of me. It's not half so bad as what I think of myself.'

"It appeared a strain for him to talk. He had big eyes, and looked as thin in the face as a postage stamp. He was so quiet you couldn't have told he was mad except for two warm, red spots in his cheeks. Bull-neck picked up a newspaper and began to shuffle it around.

"'You want to know what business a man's got in a car like this if he can't keep from disturbing other people,' No. 7 went on. 'I'd as lief tell you my business. I'm going to California to try to save my life. I wasn't able to sit up all night in a chair car, and I bought this berth and paid for it with money I earned myself. You say they wouldn't allow this anywhere but in the United States. I suppose if you were running this road you'd refuse to sell me space; you wouldn't give me a chance, if you could help, to breathe California air, would you? What are you going to California for?' No 7 seemed to be sitting up his man pretty fast by that time. 'Going out there to play golf and loaf around the big hotels, and lie about what a score you can make on grass links, aren't you? You probably never earned a dollar of the money you are spending, and you probably never were sick a day in your life, and you're as big as three of me, and yet you've got the meanness to jump all over me so the whole car can hear it, and so you know I can hear it. Say, are you naturalized? I'll bet the last dollar I've got on earth you're not an American. I know you as well as if I'd made you. Your kind own the earth wherever they go, and anybody that interferes with their comfort is an outlaw. They say corporations don't have any soul, but the corporation that runs this road has got a soul as big as the United States compared to yours. I knew I was keeping you awake; I knew I was keeping everybody awake. I couldn't help it. The porter, when he helped me last night, mislaid one of my valises, the one that had my medicines in, and I couldn't find a thing to stop my cough with.'

"He looked around all the time with his blue eyes as quick as ferrets. 'Why, there,' he exclaimed, pointing to a bag in the pile on Bull-neck's front seat. 'There's my bag now. Look here, porter, what do you mean?' he asked as the darky came up. 'There's my bag and it's been in the next section to me all this time; you claimed you'd hunted all through the car for it.'

"The darky shuffled, darky fashion. ''Deed I did hunt. I hunted right smart, but this gen'man wouldn't le' me look under his berth. He said the baggage in there was all his'n, and tole me to keep my hands off.'

"I never saw a fellow get firing mad so quick in my life as 7 did. He went for Bull-neck like a hornet. 'You great big bully, you loud-mouthed, beef-eating brute, you; you're the cause of this whole trouble yourself——'

"I might as well stop repeating what he said right there, for I never heard one man swear so at another in my life, and for three years I lived in Chicago on the West Side. He cursed him from Arizona to tidewater before I could jump and halt him; there were half a dozen women in the hind end of the car. I had hardly said the word 'women' when he stopped short. He was the worst cut up you ever saw. Didn't say another word, just put both hands to his face and kind of let the curtains fall together in front of him. But I want to tell you, while that scoring lasted Bull-neck sat as if he'd been burnt clean into the cushion. I guess the way things stood, even then, the women thought he had a good deal the worst of it. There was a sour-mouthed old maid in the far end that sputtered about the way the sick fellow talked, but none of the rest said a word about it.

"No. 7 didn't get into the dining car in time for breakfast. When the excitement was over the porter brought him back a little toast and coffee, but I noticed when the tray went out there was just about as much on it as when it came in. He didn't turn out of his section till along in the afternoon. I didn't know why then, but thinking since, I guess he felt mortified over the way he had talked. Another thing, too, he couldn't hold his head up five minutes at a time, and when the porter did get the section made up, he had to fix a bed of pillows, and the fellow lay on that all the afternoon, looking out of the window.

"Most of the time when I happened to glance over, his eyes were closed. It didn't take a very old traveler to see he was a pretty sick man. Toward evening, when he appeared to brace up a little, I dropped down in his section and asked him if he was familiar with the route, telling him I had been over it so many times I knew every section stone to Albuquerque. After I had got to talking I could see his heart was pretty full, and he started in again to speak about the chap that had roasted him so in the morning.

"'It wouldn't have been so bad,' said he, 'if I could have found my medicines last night when I ought to've had them. I haven't had any strength since I got out of bed two weeks ago, and it's been pretty hard for me keeping track of things myself; my head goes so weak. Then my wife came down last night to the train with me. Of course, we had to say good-by; you know how women get broke up——'

"'Why didn't she come with you?' I asked, for I didn't mind letting him see that in my judgment he was in a bad way.

"He looked at me with something as close to tears as I ever saw in a man's eyes. 'There wasn't any chance. She would have come, but the baby—is almost—as sick as I am. She couldn't bring him; we didn't have anybody to leave him with. The doctor said I'd have to come—right off. She had to choose, and I told her to stay with the kid. If she'd been along it wouldn't have happened; she's got some way of fixing the pillows for me so I don't cough hardly any at night. I fussed with them all night myself, but I couldn't get a blamed one fixed to do any good. Then I wouldn't have minded the coughing so much, nor even keeping everybody awake, if I hadn't made such a break right before the ladies in the car when I ripped into that fellow this morning.'

"'Oh, that's all right,' I said. 'No one would lay that up against you.'

"'No, it wasn't all right,' he insisted, with as much strength as he had. 'It cut me to the death to have the women think for a moment I'd have used such language if I'd been in my right senses, or to think I don't know what is due to a woman. I'm not able to say much the way I feel today; I'd be ashamed to speak to one now, anyway. If you get the chance to drop a word of apology for me, and will do it, I'll owe you a good deal.'

"But I knew pretty well how the women felt about it, and where their sympathies were. After supper one of them at the hind end of the car—she was a stunner, too; a young widow with two children, the prettiest boy and girl I ever saw—when she came back from the dining car after supper she saw No. 7 propped up trying to nibble a piece of chocolate. She had a big orange in her hand. As she came along she held it out to him, and said as sweet as you ever heard, 'I brought this for you because I thought maybe it would taste after such a dusty day. I see you don't eat much.'

"The man flushed up, and his eyes fell; he started to rise. 'Sit still,' she said: 'I don't want to disturb you.' 'It is very kind of you to think of this for me,' he replied, sitting down again. She stood leaning against the head of the section seat.

"'Have you suffered much from the heat today?' she asked.

"'Not so much from the heat as from the remembrance of the unfortunate break I made this morning,' he replied.

"Her face showed the prettiest ignorance in the world. She was a stunner and no mistake. All she said was, 'Shan't I peel your orange for you?' and she held out her hand for it. 'I have a fruit knife here.'

"He tried to thank her, and she slipped down, and sitting opposite him, took the orange in her hand. 'It was inexcusably rude in me,' he persisted, with the unmanwardness of a well-meaning man, 'to forget this morning that I was not alone.'

"'I am sure that none of us heard more than a very few words of the conversation.'

"He looked at her with a kind of ludicrous sadness. 'I am afraid those were the very few not meant for the public. But she made light of his apology, quartered his orange, brought up her little boy and got to help out the talk, and when she left him he looked and acted like a different man.

"Of course, that night, everybody was pretty tired and went to bed early. We didn't any of us expect to get very much sleep. No. 7 had his berth made up first, and after the porter and I had done what we could to fix the pillows we drew the curtains and left him for the night. He coughed a little early in the evening. I suppose everybody braced for it—I know I did—expecting it last all night, but, by Jingo! after 10 o'clock we never heard another sound out of that berth. And would you believe it? That old beef-eater in No. 4, opposite, after all that row he made about being disturbed the night before, snored so he kept everybody awake from one end of the car to the other, not excepting the porter.

"In the morning, I can tell you, I got up angry. I began expressing my opinion of kickers and snorers up and down the car right away, and out aloud. We struggled in to breakfast about as we did the morning before. When I came back I thought I would peek in at No. 7 and see whether there wasn't something I could bring while the stuff in the diner was hot. I asked the porter if he was awake.

"'Yes, he got off at Toltec this morning.'

"'Got off?'

"'He sat up all night to keep from coughing so as not to disturb anybody, and he got off this morning to try and get some sleep.'

"Well, it was up to Bull-neck then. Every passenger in the car had it in for Bull-neck that day for driving the sick man from the train.

"But you can never choke off folks like that. When the train got started again I was smoking a cigar with some of the men in the front end, when in he came and began to talk about No. 7. One of the fellows got up right away and left. I stood it just as long as I could. 'I don't know who you're talking to, said I after a while, 'but for my part I dont want to hear you talk, and I don't believe any one else in this room does. You kicked the first night we were out about that poor fellow keeping you awake coughing, until you had him pretty near stung to death; then you had the unmitigated nerve yourself to keep everybody awake all last night with your infernal snoring and snoring. Now, I haven't had any sleep—I guess nobody in this car has—for two nights—all on account of you. I want to tell you right now,' I shook my finger straight at him, 'if you report this tonight you'll have an account to square with me in the morning,' and I up and left, and every last man filed out after me. I guess he felt as if he would like to swallow his golf clubs. But all the same, the fellow didn't make any noise that night; he never sneezed; the porter said he was so scared he sat up all night. I slept like a baby, you bet.

"I had struck up an acquaintance myself on the strength of the disturbance, with the pretty widow that had the two children. Next morning, after breakfast, I took some Indian trinkets I had picked up back to her section to the little boy, and we got to talking about Bull-neck. 'I've got the first good night's sleep I've had since we started,' said I. 'Then I told her, modestly about the little talk in the smoking-room the night before, and how I'd scared the globe trotter into keeping quiet so the rest of us could have at least one night's sleep. She was so demure and had so modest a way of keeping her eyes down it was pretty hard to tell what kind of an impression the story was making on her. 'I don't think,' I went on, 'he ever peeped last night. I didn't hear him make a sound, did you?'

"'N—no.'

"'I hope you rested well yourself,' I went on, sort of congratulating myself.

"'Well—pretty well.'

"The old sour-faced girl in the section right behind her was listening so nothing should get away, and just at that point she chipped in. 'I don't believe,' says she, kind of pointed like, 'a soul in this end of the car got a wink last night. There was the worst snoring all night I ever heard in my life, and I've spent fifteen different summers at Chautauqua assemblies.'

"'Who was snoring last night?' I blustered, rather sharp, for I thought she was talking just to hear herself talk. But she came back at me straight as an arrow.

"'The porter,' she snapped, 'said it was you.'"

The Bishop's Retort.

REAR ADMIRAL CHARLES S. COTTON, who has been entertained abroad with singular splendor and heartiness, sat one evening at a dinner party beside the Bishop of Durham, a clergyman noted for his wit.

Near the Bishop there was a millionaire manufacturer, a stout man with a loud, coarse laugh, who ate and drank a good deal, and who cracked, every little while, a stupid joke.

One of this man's jokes was leveled at the brilliant Bishop of Durham, whom he did not know from Adam. It was enough for him that the Bishop's garb was clerical. Here was a parson; here, therefore, a chance to poke a little fun at the parson's trade.

"I have three sons," he began in a loud tone, nudging his neighbor and winking toward the Bishop—"three fine lads. They are in trade. I had always said that if I ever had a stupid son I'd make a parson of him."

The millionaire roared out his discordant laugh, and the Bishop of Durham said to him with a quiet smile:

"Your father thought differently from you, eh?"

The Suspicious Newsboy.

JACK LONDON, the young novelist, was riding recently on a California train when a newsboy, passing down the aisle of his car, besought him to buy one of his own books.

"Here you are, sir," said the boy persuasively, "'The Call of the Wild,' a fine book about Alaska life by Jack London."

"But I have read the book. I am Jack London myself," returned the young man.

"Oh, you are?" said the newsboy, and he passed on with a laugh of incredulity.

A little later he came back with another parcel of books; a collection, this time, of the works of Miss Corelli.

"How about these?" he asked, pausing beside London. "Here's 'Temporal Power,' and 'Thelma,' and 'Vendetta.' They're by Marie Corelli. They're full of excitement and blood. 'Thelma' I know you'll like."

As London shook his head, the boy resumed:

"And he was strangely mean, that chap. He was traveling with his daughter, a little girl of five or six. He was holding her over the rail, so that she could see a monster catfish, when, somehow, he let go of her, and she fell into the deep stream with a splash.

"A deck hand was after her in an instant. Headforemost he shot in, and she was back in her father's arms again before three minutes had passed.

The man had none, so the father went bustling nervously here and there over the boat, waving his dollar bill, and saying:

Who Owned the Corpse?

I WISH I had a stenographic report of that discussion. It was the finest exhibition of mental "ground and lofty tumbling" that has come under my notice in many a day. There was no touch of grief on the part of the "bereaved" brother, no shadow of sympathy for his loss on the part of his two friends. The three minds were completely taken up with determining whose body the dying man left behind him—whether it belonged to the surviving brother, who had been his brother for thirty-four years, or to the woman who had been his wife for only seven years. Here is a specimen of the argument as I recall it from memory:

"Before John died, his body was his own, wasn't it?"

"Sure."

"He could do what he pleased with it, couldn't he?"

"Sure. Nobody says he couldn't."

"Well, he gave it to her, didn't he?"

"What if he did?"

"Hold on! He gave it to her when he was living, didn't he?"

"Sure. And she had it while he was living, didn't she?"

"Hold on! He gave it to her when he was living, didn't he?"

"Sure. And she had it while he was livinf, didn't she?"

"Hold on! Now, he died, didn't he? Now, whose body was it then? That's the question. It couldn't be John's body, because there wasn't any John when he was dead, was there? When there isn't any John how can John own a body?"

"Sure. That's so."

"Well, then, if it wasn't John's body, whose body was it?"

"That's what I say," the brother of the deceased answered triumphantly. "That's what I told her. If it wasn't John's body it naturally belonged to John's kith and kin. As long as it was John's body he could do what he wanted to with it, but when there wasn't any John—why, the body ought to belong to me, oughtn't it? Ain't I been his brother ever since he was born? Why, she ain't even a member of our family."

A shadow of logic, to say nothing of Christian charity! O shade of John Stuart Mill!

And these three were men, not monkeys.—[Brooklyn Eagle.

Clay's Black Looks.

A MAN was once being tried for murder, and his case looked hopeless, indeed. He had, without any seeming provocation, murdered one of his neighbors in cold blood. Not a lawyer in the county would touch the case. It looked bad enough to ruin the reputation of any barrister.

The man, as a last extremity, appealed to Mr. Clay to take the case for him. Everyone thought that Clay would certainly refuse. But when the celebrated lawyer looked into the matter, his fighting blood was roused, and, to the great surprise of all, he accepted.

Then came a trial the like of which has seldom been seen. Clay slowly carried on the case, and it looked more and more hopeless. The only ground of defense the prisoner had was that the murdered man had looked at him with such a fierce, murderous look that out of self-defense he had struck first. A ripple passed through the jury at this evidence.

The time came for Clay to make his defense. It was settled in the minds of the spectators that the man was guilty of murder in the first degree. Clay calmly proceeded and laid all the proof before them in a masterly way. Then, just as he was about to conclude, he played his last and master card.

"Gentlemen of the jury," he said, assuming the fiercest, blackest look, and carrying the most undying hatred in it ever seen—"gentlemen, if a man should look at you like this, what would you do?"

That was all he said, but that was enough. The jury was startled, and some even quailed in their seats. The judge moved uneasily on his bench. After about fifteen minutes the jury filed slowly back with a "Not guilty, Your Honor." The victory was complete.

When Clay was congratulated on his easy victory he said: "It was not so easy as you think. I spent days and days in my room before the mirror practicing that look."—[Louisville Courier-Journal.

Just Like Boys.

IN the days when a brown-stone front was regarded as the outer and visible sign of "gentility," and when life in New York was a simpler matter than it is today, there lived in one of the orthodox mansions a certain highly respectable maiden lady and two nephews, cousins, to whom she was guardian.

A classmate and chum of the elder boy had become the happy possessor of a rooster, which, the seller assured him, had a "big gamy streak to him." Inflamed by this eulogy, both boys were wild for a "match"; and not having the means wherewith to purchase an antagonist, they put their heads together to compass the borrowing of one, and with the following results:

The younger cousin, an unusually polite and gentle little boy, was dispatched on the first holiday to the grocery where the family dealt, ostensibly to order a chicken for dinner. "But," he said, pointing to a coop of live fowls, "my aunt wants to see it before you kill it."

The grocer assented, and forthwith drew from the coop what he considered a desirable bird. But the boy would have none of it. He had set his heart on a rainbow-colored rooster with enormous comb and tail.

"Why," said the grocer, "that is the very toughest old customer in the bunch."

"My aunt likes them tough," said the gentle little boy.

In a couple of hours the rooster was borne back to the store—one eye shut, his comb torn and bloody, and but one feather of his beautiful tail left. But he was crowing so triumphantly that a small crowd followed him. He had suffered, but the bird with the "big gamy streak to him" was nowhere.

"My aunt is much obliged to you," said the polite and gentle little boy to the astonished grocer. "She can't decide today, but she would like to look at him again next Saturday."—[Century Magazine.

A Cheery Cardinal.

CARDINAL GIBBONS, the highest dignitary of the Roman Church in America, is a man of most attractive personality, and if he had gone into politics instead of religion, he would no doubt have held a position no less exalted in the state than he now holds in the church. He stopped a day or two in New York on his way to Rome in response to the summons from the College of Cardinals, and he was interviewed by a reporter who was nervy enough to tackle kings, or presidents, or senators, or governors, or emperors, or anything political, but he was a bit shy in matters ecclesiastical. He got a slight tip from the man at the door, who said he would ask if "His Eminence" could be seen, and when he was admitted, he went slowly at first in his method of addressing the Cardinal, but finally he began a question with: "Your Eminence——." The Cardinal smiled and held up his hand.

"My son," he said with humorous gravity, "the weather is too hot for so much dignity as that. Don't call me 'Your Eminence'; just call me—well, call me Gibbons."

"That might not be so difficult," replied the reporter, now quite easy on his feet, "seeing that one of my college chums, the son of an eminent divine, was named Gibson, and we always called him 'Gibbie.'"

The Cardinal assumed a frown, and the reporter became anxious.

"Well, my son," said His Eminence, breaking into a laugh, "call me 'Gibbie.' I think I would rather, like that."

However, it is not of record that the reporter called the Cardinal 'Gibbie.'—[Detroit Free Press.

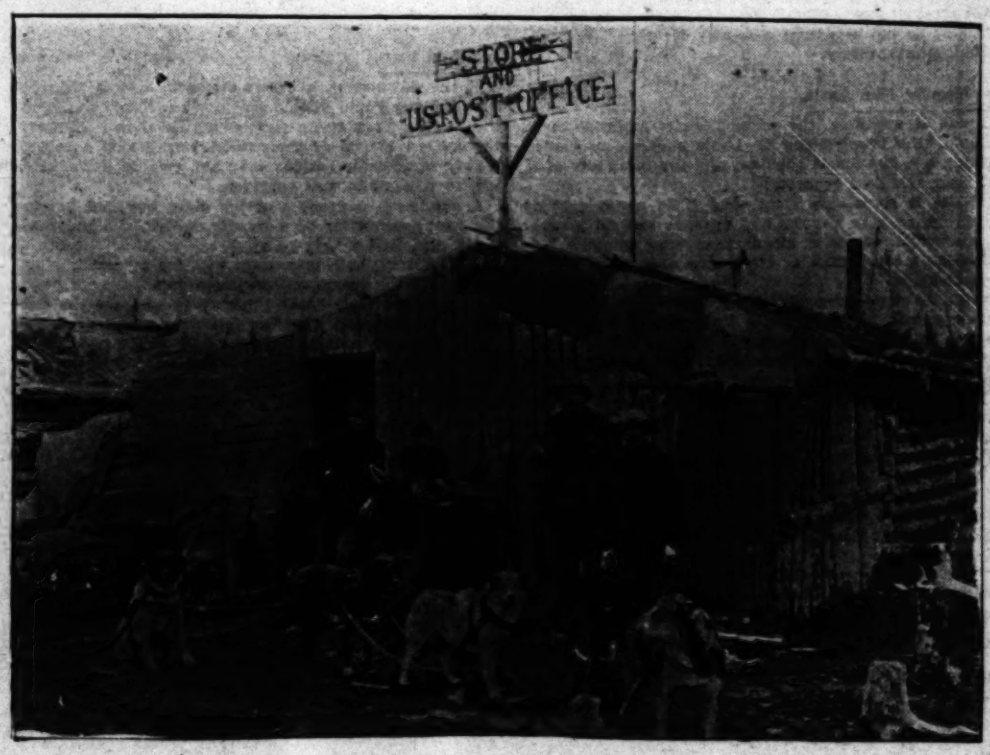
The Alaskan Boundary Dispute. By Frederic J. Haskin.

CANADA'S POOR CASE.

STATEMENT OF THE ARGUMENTS OF THE TWO SIDES.

From a Special Correspondent.

THE dispute between the United States and Great Britain over the Alaskan boundary involves a district ranging from thirty to sixty miles in width and about five hundred miles in length. If this controversy is decided against us, we will lose a strip of territory about equal in size to the combined area of the three New England States, Connecticut, New Hampshire and Massachusetts. It isn't the worth of the land itself which has given rise to the contention, but the strategic value of its location. According to the present confines the United States has the English possessions bottled up and shut off from communication with the Pacific ocean. Canada wants harbors on the Alaska coast so she can reach her valuable possessions in the interior without being subjected to American customs regulations. As it is now there is no way of getting into the Klondike without traversing American soil. This is admittedly very awkward for the Britishers, but the way in which they propose to remedy the evil will hardly go through on its merits.



A STATION ON THE YUKON.

Canada has a poor case. When the United States government contemplated buying Alaska from Russia, both the Russian and English maps were called for and examined in order to determine just what territory was to be included in the purchase. The maps of the two countries were identical, being based upon a treaty which had stood since 1825. The American government closed the deal with the representatives of the Czar and took possession of its property. Great Britain knew all the particulars, and raised no objection to them. For fifty years after the transaction there was no complaint, but when gold was discovered in the interior Canada suddenly began to find fault with the boundary, claiming that according to the terms of the old treaty, the line should be nearer the coast and include several of the best salt-water harbors in English territory. The representatives of John Bull said it was very plain that they were entitled to a number of these harbors, but in order to be in keeping with the spirit of compromise they would be satisfied with one—the best one. That is one of the British tricks: Claim everything, meet the other fellow half way on his own ground, and end by having a clear gain of whatever he finally concedes.

What the Old Treaty Says.

The boundary line is described in Articles III and IV of the old treaty, as follows:

"III. Commencing from the southernmost point of the island called Prince of Wales Island, which point lies in the parallel of 54 deg. 40 min. north latitude, and between the one hundred and thirty-first and one hundred and thirty-third degrees of west longitude (meridian of Greenwich,) the said line shall ascend to the north along the channel called Portland Channel as far as the point of the continent where it strikes the fifty-sixth degree of north latitude; from this last mentioned point the line of demarkation shall follow the summit of the mountains situated parallel to the coast as far as the point of intersection of the one hundred and forty-first degree of west longitude (of the same meridian,) and from said point of intersection north, etc.

"IV. With reference to the line of demarkation laid down in the preceding article, it is understood:

"First. That the island called the Prince of Wales Island shall belong wholly to Russia.

"Second. That wherever the summit of the mountains shall extend in a direction parallel to the coast from the fifty-sixth degree of north latitude to the point of intersection of the one hundred and forty-first degree of west longitude, and shall prove to be a distance of more than ten marine leagues from the ocean, the limit between the British possessions and the line of coast which is to belong to Russia as above mentioned shall be formed by a line parallel to the windings (sinuosities) of the coast, and which shall never exceed the distance of ten marine leagues therefrom."

Sir Wilfred Laurier, Premier of Canada, stated in the Canadian parliament, in reply to a question relative to the Alaskan boundary:

"According to our construction of the intent of the treaty, the boundary line should follow the crest of the mountains nearest the coast, passing over bays and creeks and inlets, which are territorial waters." The wording of the treaty contradicts this flatly by saying "formed by a line parallel to the windings (sinuosities) of the coast." To make the intention of the treaty more certain, Count Nesselrode, the Russian Prime Minister who framed it, said: "If Prince of Wales Island remains ours, it must be of some use to us, and if the English should command the coast opposite, it would be entirely isolated, deprived of all support, and at the mercy of the British establishments on the main land. Russia does not insist upon the reservation of the strip along the coast for any value it has, but in order not to lose the surrounding isles. We do not seek an advantage, but rather to avoid giving one."

Thus it will be seen that Russian diplomacy was fully equal to the cunning of John Bull in those old days, and it also clearly shows that the very thing Canada is now contending for is just what Russia declared she should not have.

Among the points used in the argument to prove the American title good will be the following:

American Argument.

First—After the treaty of 1825 the Russian government immediately published a map, claiming the slip of territory whose legal possession is now disputed, as well as all the interior waters of the sea inclosed by it.

Second—The Russian American Company established forts and trading posts within the strip.

Third—By virtue of a lease, which was a recognized assertion of its sovereignty, these forts and posts were temporarily transferred to a British company.

Fourth—At the termination of this lease Russia reentered and took possession of the strip, and remained in undisputed control until Alaska was transferred to the United States.

Fifth—Russia received the allegiance of the native Indians inhabiting the strip and exercised control and supervision over them.

Sixth—Immediately after the cession in 1867 the United States issued a map, which was identical with the former claim of Russia.

Seventh—Upon the transfer of Alaska a portion of the United States army was despatched to occupy the territory.

Eighth—Since the cession United States postoffices have been established and maintained at various points on the strip.

Ninth—Custom houses have likewise been established and duties collected therein.

Tenth—Government and mission schools have been maintained.

Eleventh—Since the date of the cession United States revenue vessels have patrolled the interior waters to enforce American laws.

Twelfth—The United States has exercised acts of sovereignty over the Indian tribes inhabiting the strip, and these Indians have rendered unquestionable allegiance to the United States.

Thirteenth—In the census of 1880, as well as that of 1890, all the Indian tribes inhabiting the strip were included in the population of the United States.

Fourteenth—The Territorial government of Alaska has exercised various and repeated acts of sovereignty over the strip and the interior waters inclosed by it, and the writs of the United States courts run throughout the whole extent.

Fifteenth—Under the territorial claim of the United States and the protection of its government Americans have entered and occupied the strip, built cities and towns and established many industrial enterprises therein.

Sixteenth—All the foregoing acts have taken place without a single protest or complaint on the part of the British or Canadian governments until this time.

The British Argument.

The British contention is:

First—That the pass called the Portland Channel did not mean what is now called Portland Channel, but what is now known as Bohm Canal, which they claim was formerly called Portland Channel.

Second—That though the Russians ran the line a uniform ten leagues from the coast, as though there were no distinct range of mountains parallel to the coast, there is, in fact, a range of mountains parallel to the coast which should have been followed.

Third—That in case there were no range of mountains, the ten marine leagues should have been measured, not from the line of salt water, but from the outer coast line of the islands or the ocean, that being meant as the coast.

Fourth—That even if there were no distinct range of mountains and the line was accepted as ten marine leagues from the coast, it should be ten leagues from a meandered coast line, and should cut across the mouths of the narrow channels and inlets with which the coast is indented, leaving the harbors at the head of these inlets in the possession of Great Britain.

This interpretation of what the old treaty meant falls pretty flat in the face of the statement of Count Nesselrode. "Russia insists on retaining the coast opposite Prince of Wales Island, because she does not propose to put it at the mercy of England." Russia intended to keep the English away from the coast. There is no disputing that fact. The names the streams were called by were of no importance as long as John Bull kept his place. If Russia still owned the territory there would not be any arbitration or meetings to decide whether the various streams had changed their names or not. England would be told to keep out, and she would do it.

An Old Dodge.

That is an old dodge of the Canadian government officials, and they work it for all it is worth. Not long ago three Americans found some gold-bearing gravel in American territory, a short distance south of the Canadian border. Their claim was located on the north bank of a stream which paralleled the little river that marked the boundary, six miles to the north. During the night the Canadian police moved their headquarters to the stream upon which the prospectors' claim was located, and affably explained that they had just discovered that instead of the boundary being the north fork, it was the south fork, consequently their property was in English territory, and taxes would have to be assessed upon the same. The Americans withdrew and held a consultation. They knew it was a put-up job. There were three of them and only two Canadian officials, so they pulled their guns and got the d

they pulled their guns and got the drop on the Britishers. Then one of the Americans made a little speech: "You fellows may be giving it to us straight, but we think your discovery of a change in the boundary is all in your hats. You would never have come down here if we had not discovered some dust in this creek. Whenever you can prove that there is a change in the boundary, come back, and we'll fork over, but until you can prove it, stay away. Now you skin out of here blamed quick, if you don't want to get blowed up."

They retired, swearing vengeance, but did not come back. It is seldom a wise policy to resist the Canadian police, because they have authority for their acts. They are the law. They can assess taxes and collect them on the spot. They handle mail and act as judges. They perform all the duties that it requires a dozen officials to look after in an American community. As a rule they do their work well. They are not allowed to own any property, and are moved from place to place at frequent intervals to prevent them from forming associations or ties that might prejudice their official acts. They are generally fair, but when one of them is disposed to misuse his authority, he has full swing.

An American has little help from his own law. There is no official on the ground who has equal authority with the Canadian police. All matters of importance must go to Washington, and while they are going and getting passed on and coming back all manner of things may happen. The English know this and take advantage of the situation.

But we have the upper hand in owning the coast. Canada needs an outlet, and needs it bad. In the old days when the English tried to bluff Russia and failed, they got along very well by obtaining leases and rights to use the streams. Then the navigation was accomplished by means of small boats which could enter the little rivers, but the commerce has grown to such proportions now, and the vessels are so large, that they can only enter a few of the best harbors. The cost of breaking the cargoes for small boats is out of the question.

There is no disputing the fact of Canada's need in the matter, but the means she is using to help herself ought not to be given serious consideration. There never was a clearer or more distinct claim than that of the United States to Alaska's coast. We have exactly the same title that Russia had, and Russia perfected it with the sole intention of keeping England out.

If, in the face of all the evidence, we make any concession, it ought to be for some consideration other than the legality of Canada's claim.

TRAINING FOR WOMEN ARCHITECT 'S

As to the training which is necessary for a woman architect, if it is possible, she should obtain a college education, for this is the best foundation for any profession, and the mental training thus received is of inestimable value. After leaving college, she should enter one of the best of the schools of architecture which are open to women. If this is not possible, she should not choose a second-rate school. As an alternative, it would be far better for her to study architecture and designing under the advice of some good architect or professor of architecture, if she should be so fortunate as to find such a one who is willing to help her. If she cannot do this, let her ask a good practical draughtsman who has been through the schools to lay out a course of study for her to follow. Under no consideration should she attempt to study architecture through correspondence schools. While these institutions may be of the greatest value to students of other professions, it is time and money wasted for a student of architecture to attempt to learn her profession by "absent treatment."

She should read the histories of architecture—Rosenpetter's work for styles in general, T. Roger Smith's for Gothic, Von Reber's "Medieval and Classical Architecture" and, if she can read French, Viollet-le-Duc's is very useful. The study of the classical orders and academical design is the best basis that one can have. Vignola's book on classical orders is very good, and a student should study this until she is able to draw the different orders from memory. For academical design, there is Croquis's "D'Architecture," which publishes the prize drawings of L'Ecole des Beaux Arts, and it is very good practice to take the programmes given out for academical problems in the different schools and practice in working these out for yourself.

The public libraries, all over the country, have collections of photographs and drawings of the best architecture in the world; and, if one cannot see the originals, these are next best for the student. She should also make free-hand sketches, beginning at first with merely the outline of such objects as Greek vases, then art museum casts, and finally buildings. In sketching, however, she must select only those objects which are considered best in design.—[Josephine Wright Chapman, in September Success.

A reader at the free library recently was much offended at what was considered the incompetency of the librarians, of whom she demanded a book called "Wait a Minute." The assistant protested she had never heard of the volume, but the inquirer insisted a friend had read the book and had returned it only the day before. A thorough search of the catalogue failed to find the title recorded, so the disgruntled reader had to depart without it.

Later in the day the reader returned and apologized, saying the book wanted was named "Tarry Thou Till I Come."—[New York Times.

The Genial Idiot.

SOME TIMELY SUGGESTIONS TO COLLEGE GRADUATES.

By John Kendrick Bangs.

"THIS is a sad and solemn period of the year for some people, and for the time being I would rather be a donkey engine on a canal boat than a college graduate of last June's vintage," observed the Idiot, unfolding his napkin and scrutinizing the various objects of food upon the table. "Mary, bring me a bushel of those liliputian Saratoga chips that men call Force. I would infuse a little sunshine into my system this gloomy morning."

"You don't want to eat too much of that cereal," put in the Doctor; "You're too gay as you are."

"I know I don't," said the Idiot. "And not wanting to, I shan't. Make it a peck, Mary."

"I should like to know why you'd rather be a donkey engine on a canal boat than a college graduate of last spring," said Mr. Pedagogue. "It strikes me that is a most extraordinary choice."

"I guess he's been sizing himself up and knows what he's fit for," suggested Mr. Brief, sarcastically.

"Guess again. Have another fit," said the Idiot, buttering the Poet's muffin by mistake. "I haven't been sizing myself up—it's a bad thing to do. When I do any sizing at all, I size myself down. It leaves you a bigger margin to speculate on. But replying to your inquiry, Mr. Pedagogue, which was so rudely intruded upon by our Attorney-General here, I'd rather be a donkey engine on a canal boat these days than a freshly minted bachelor of arts because the donkey engine has a steady job, knows what he can do, and does it, while the fledgling B.A. has come down off the high horse he has been riding for four years, and is flying from pillar to post and from post back to pillar again, looking for something to do. As each day of this halcyon month passes, and his chances for being asked to accept a $50,000 salary as the head of a trust company grow visibly less, he becomes correspondingly depressed, and along about the middle of September he begins to ask himself if life is worth living, after all."

"You draw a gloomy picture of the young man's condition," said Mr Pedagogue. "For my part, I don't believe he is so badly off. There is plenty of work to be done in this world."

"Heaps," said the Idiot. "But the work is already being done, and when it comes to finding a place, the young man who can orate beautifully upon 'The Influences of the Italian Renaissance upon Chinese Art,' and who can converse fluently in 922 of the 8,673,412 Aryan languages, isn't in it with the chap who doesn't know the difference between the Pons Asinorum and an automobile, but who can wash windows when it comes to getting his name on a pay roll."

The Poet sighed. "I'm afraid you are right there," he said. "It was that very experience that drove me to writing poetry. When I was graduated at Blue Haven, I started in to get something to do, and at the end of six months had my name on the eligible list of about four hundred places, but that was the last I heard of it."

"So you took up poetry to pay your poor but honest bills?" said the Idiot.

"I had to do something," said the Poet, apologetically.

"And nobody blames you," said the Idiot. "There's no telling what some of us may come to yet. You might have taken to drink, which in my humble judgment is worse than writing poetry."

"Probably would have, if he'd had the money," sneered Mr. Brief.

"It's the same old story, year after year," said the Idiot. "Times haven't changed in twenty years. That thing business men call the eligible list, on which they place the names of all ambitious Bachelors of Arts who apply for work, is the finest cemetery for undeveloped talent in all creation. Get your name on it once, and Gabriel's trump itself won't get it off, except in very rare instances. Take the case of my friend Jack Bilker, for instance. He was in my class in college, way back in 1883, and when commencement time came he was our valedictorian. He was beyond all question, present company excepted, the cleverest man in the class. In the fall he went the rounds looking for a job, and got his name on sixty eligible lists, but nothing more. Then, disgusted, he went to South America and married the daughter of a rich Brazilian, whose brother had been a classmate of his. The old father-in-law died a few years later, leaving all his money to his two children, and in 1893 Bilker came back to New York with his $10,000,000 wife. Years passed, and by careful investment of his wife's fortune he ran it up to something like $20,000,000, and what do you think happened to him last week?"

"Lost it all on Wall street," suggested the Bibliomaniac.

"No, sir. He got a letter," said the Idiot. "A letter from one of the firms in New York to whom he applied twenty years ago for a job, saying that they had at last found an opening for him, and if he could bring good references and would call at the office the following Monday, they would give him a place in the packing department at five dollars per week. He's the only man in my experience who ever got off that eligible list, and it took him just twenty years, three months and five days to do it."

"Very interesting," said Mr. Whitechoker. "And what did Mr. Bilker do? Write a polite letter declining the position?"

"Not he," said the Idiot. "He gave it to his son, Jack Bilkey, Jr., who had just taken his degree at the University of Magenta, and sent him down to get the place. He got it and begins work tomorrow."

"I shouldn't think a man with $20,000,000 would want his son to take a position of that kind," said Mrs. Pedagogue.

"Oh, yes, indeed," said the Idiot. "It's exactly what he did want. Living on the income of $20,000,000 is very expensive business, Mrs. Pedagogue, and even the millionaire in these days cannot afford to sneeze at a five dollar bill."

"There must be something wrong with our system if a well-instructed youth, willing and able to work, cannot secure employment," said Mr. Pedagogue. "Such a condition of affairs would soon give a black eye to the cause of education."

"It is not the fault of our system," observed the Idiot. "It's the fault of our colleges, mainly, and incidentally of the boys themselves. I wonder sometimes why, when the Educational Congress meets in Boston we do not hear of papers by our college presidents on this particular subject. They discuss Latin and Greek, and Five Minute Courses, and 'Should Seniors be Spanked?' and things like that, but 'What Shall We Do to Get the Boys a Job' seems to have escaped the eagle eyes of Dr. Hadley, President Eliot and Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler. I wish they'd ask me to one of their conferences just once. I'd give 'em a talk on 'What is Our Duty to the Kid' that would open their eyes."

"Just think of the Idiot speaking before that Boston crowd!" sneered the Bibliomaniac.

"Harvard would probably give him an LL.D. for his wondrous contribution to the cause of education," said Mr. Brief. "Then we should hear of Dr. Idiot, the probable successor to Dr. Eliot. I tell you——"

"Don't tell us—please," said the Idiot. You draw such an alluring picture of the future that you might tempt me to give up trying to unload the bonds of the United States Panama Hat Company upon an unsuspecting public and announce myself definitely as a candidate for the presidency of Yale or Harvard."

"You might write a letter to the newspapers embodying your views on the subject, however," said Mr. Whitechoker, who was visibly interested.

"I shall never waste any of my ideas upon the desert correspondence column," returned the Idiot. "I'd rather put 'em where they'll be read—in the last chapter of a romantic novel, or in the advertising pages of a magazine."

"You're so coy about saying what they are," observed Mr. Brief, "that I don't believe you've got any views on the subject."

"Yes I have," said the Idiot. "And they're simple. They are summed up in the injunction, 'Teach the Boys How to Do Something.' Doesn't make any difference what it is as long as it's something. Reading Latin at sight isn't much help in the dry goods business, and even a most intimate knowledge of the minute details of the Seventeenth Punic War isn't going to get Mr. Schwab's place for anybody. Fancy a boy walking up to Mr. Pierpont Morgan and saying, 'Mr. Morgan, I want a job.' 'Well,' says Morgan, 'What can you do?' 'I can tell you who was king in Kamschatka in B.C. 423, and I can quote Homer to beat the band.' What do you suppose Mr. Morgan would say to that young man? Why, it wouldn't be fit to print!"

"They do teach young men the professions," said Mr. Brief. "Law, Medicine, Theology, Letters——"

"But all those professions are overcrowded," said the Idiot, "while the country is simply crying for good farmers, well-trained janitors, expert chauffeurs, railway conductors and hotel clerks. Every man nowadays wants to be a doctor, or a lawyer, or a clergyman, and the colleges foster that spirit by cultivating special schools. If they'd get up a good course in janiting, it would afford a fine opening for a young man——"

"Who'd be a janitor?" cried the Bibliomaniac.

"If it was, as it ought to be, an honorable calling for which men were fitted in college, a great many would," said the Idiot. "It pays a fair salary, the work is not difficult; it is a commanding position—the janitor is monarch of all he surveys, and much that he doesn't besides—and a young man who gets it steps into a nice little apartment on the ground floor that is all his own, big enough for him and his wife, and which he occupies free of charge from the moment he secures the appointment; and of all the professions of the present day it is the one that stands most in need of being elevated."

"What good is a college education to a farmer?" demanded the Bibliomaniac.

"I don't know," said the Idiot. "You had a college education, and ought to be able to tell us. I should say, however, that for the reflective mind, which a college education should assure, there is nothing more delightful than a farmer's life. What joy to toss hay with the measures of Euclid ringing in our ears; what bliss to milk the cow while the mind buries itself with the intricate problems of Plutarch; what felicity to churn the butter with one's thoughts harking back to the Epitaphs of Aristotle, or to fodder the cattle with the sonorous songs of Socrates——"

"Oh, tutt!" cried Mr. Pedagogue.

"They have a School of Agriculture at Cornell," said Mr. Whitechoker.

"They have, indeed," said the Idiot. "And it proves my point. It prepares men for the future. It gives them at least one thing they can do. I don't believe there's an institution in this country that turns out better oarsmen than that same School of Agriculture up at Ithica. Read the racing records of the past twenty-five years and you'll see."

"They must have taught Idiocy at your Alma Mater," said Mr. Brief.

"They did," observed the Idiot. "And they taught it well. There was a time when I could be an Idiot in five languages, two dead and three living."

"Well, anyhow, I don't believe, on the whole, that your ideas will prove practicable," said the Doctor. "Our universities aren't going to turn themselves into trade schools."

"Then," said the Idiot, "for the ordinary college graduate there is only one way to assure himself of immediate employment and a quick fortune."

"What's that?" demanded Mr. Brief.

"To marry a rich girl," replied the Idiot. "I'm told it's a very pleasant business."

TREE PLANTING.

ITS RESPONSIBILITIES AND SOME OF ITS PROBLEMS.

By Belle Sumner Angier.

NOTE.—Queries, properly and clearly stated, addressed to the House Beautiful department in care of The Times, and which relate to floriculture or landscape gardening, architecture or interior decoration, will be answered, so far as possible, either in these columns or by personal letter. Answers will have frequently to be deferred for a week or more.

PLANTING NOTE.

ARE you ambitious to grow your own eucalyptus and cypress trees? The seeds of these trees may be planted best this month Sow in boxes or pans, well drained, and protect them from the direct rays of the sun.

The Responsibility of the Planter.

For several months I have been deeply interested in a warfare which has been going on in Los Angeles county against the Schinus molle, or pepper tree. It would appear that some one had discovered that the black scale did not find the pepper tree distasteful as an abiding place, as do most insects, and forgetting that the black scale is not at all exclusive in its tastes, and has made a temporary abiding place of almost every tree that grows in this southland of ours, a quiet but none the less vigorous campaign was begun against the tree in question. Now I am very confident that the pepper tree has been too promiscuously planted, and do not consider it by any means the best tree for street planting in our cities, and it takes too much room to be entirely acceptable in the small lot, but I still contend that it is by far the most graceful and picturesque tree we have in California. A native of Peru, Schinus molle was introduced to California along with the early missions, and is frequently styled the "California pepper." I have inspected trees all over Southern California, in street rows, in groves, and single specimens, and I am convinced that away from dusty, scale-breeding conditions, the pepper will be found to be as "clean" as any other ornamental tree grown, unless we except the eucalyptus and the camphor. It has been painful to see in Los Angeles county so many fine trees laid low by the ax, and it is with real thanksgiving that I have noted the arrival of the tiny Scutellista cyanea among our ornamental trees, and trust that the man with the ax will be stayed in his procedure until our new "tree-cleaning friends" shall have made a thorough trial of their abilities. In the meantime nothing will restore the lost trees, or make up for the lost time; in some cases of many, many years of care and fine growth having been laid low.

LOVERS' LANE AT LOMA LINDA.

History Repeats Itself.

It is the same old story—the story of tree planting and tree protection in California these twenty years or more past. Up in the far northern part of the State a tree once planted will care for itself, unless fire or the ax, or some other extreme cause leads to its downfall, but here in the South, even in most favored localities, man has not made an immortal of himself merely by planting a tree—not by a good long ways! The planting is only the beginning of care and responsibility. The tree must be cultivated, watered, protected from vandalism and from natural enemies, such as the scale and other insects invariably found in semi-tropical climates. A trifling neglect and your young tree is dwarfed for life, or comes out such a scarred, twisted cripple that your pleasure in it is gone. Some varieties, to be sure, will stand more abuse and neglect than others, but I, who from childhood have loved trees almost more than my human friends, could cite to you more painful histories of fine orchards, groves and splendid historical trees that have absolutely passed from view in the fifteen years I have known California than I can of the human families. I have not yet determined when a tree may be safely left in Southern California to take care of itself—but with shuddering remembrance of the ax, I would now say to all tree lovers: "Plant, but plan also to protect." The time is now ripe in all the little towns and municipalities springing up in this part of the State to so frame our laws that our street trees, as well as those on private grounds shall be protected. This matter of protection for the trees planted by private owners has been so ably handled in recent editorials in the Daily Times that I shall not review the matter, save to mention that in many eastern cities, but especially in Washington, D. C., the municipality protects the trees after they are planted.

No vandalism could be committed in Washington such as was recently referred to in this department as taking place in a Pomona park, where a private corporation deliberately cut off the entire top and upper branches of several valuable trees, among which were the rarely beautiful Cedrus deodora and a fine araucaria, and all this mutilation simply to save the divergence of a line a half dozen feet, and the placing of a pole two feet one side or the other of its present position. In Los Angeles, as in San Diego and other cities, one may constantly witness the "lopping" of sidewalk trees because of the interference of their branches with telephone or telegraph wires. It is high time that our very learned lawmakers make a serious study of the conflicting interests of the people of our towns, and endeavor to frame laws, which will do away with this tremendous waste of money and time, the natural result of our present too numerous ordinances.

Carelessness plays its part in the havoc, too, or lack of forethought. A daily paper in one of our larger cities published the following item in its news columns a few days ago:

"While the members of the Park Improvement Committee are trying to get a few trees started in the big park, and are congratulating themselves on their successes, little and big, the City Council and Board of Works are uniting to permit the destruction of shade trees, the few that the city can boast, in all parts of the city. Almost every evening that the Council meets there are a number of petitions for the right to cut down trees, and they are almost invariably granted. Saturday a number of large pepper trees near the corner of Third and K streets were being cut down to make way for a walk that the Council had ordered."

Doubtless this same careless form of legislation is responsible in other cities for the same unfortunate conditions. Since the financial phase of the question is the one most apt to appear to the business men, who usually compose our town boards and councils, it is probable that a few statistics concerning tree planting in former years, and the cost of maintaining the same, as well as an appeal to their common sense by showing the increased value of property in towns which are well planted, and have fine tree-lined avenues, will doubtless in most cases suffice to make a change in tactics.

Conditions vary so in different localities that it would be next to impossible to furnish a true estimate of the cost of the first five years of life for any one tree that might apply to all parts of Southern California, but planters know that the initial expense is not the one. In a certain township of Southern Illinois five years ago the commissioners estimated the cost of maintaining a tree for two years from planting to about one dollar (much less, of course, than in this treeless country.) Through the influence of a tree lover this amount was offered as a bounty for tree planting for a period of a year or more. The result is one of the most beautiful sections of the State. Residents of Southern California do not require a bounty for tree planting. There is a general and generous disposition to beautify the homes and the streets of our towns, but what we do need is the making of laws and their vigorous enforcement for the protection of the trees after they are planted.

SHADED WALK IN ECHO PARK, LOS ANGELES.

Country Roadsides.

Generally speaking, the best trees for roadside planting in this part of the State (and especially where the irrigation must be limited or irregular,) are the Schinus molle, or Pepper tree, and the Eucalyptus. The E. globulus (Tasmanian blue gum,) E. robusta (Swamp Mahogany,) and E. rostrata (Red gum) being the most popular varieties.

Riverside's famous "Magnolia avenue" is really lined with great Eucalyptus trees, their tremendous branches meeting overhead in a long embrace, forming a beautiful archway. The Magnolias on this avenue are of rare occurrence. Other driveways at Arlington lined with the Pepper tree would be as famous as "Magnolia" when they nearer the main line of travel. I have in mind a section of Munroe street where the Peppers have never been trimmed, but allowed to grow in all their native picturesqueness with a result that would enthuse an artistic eye. Perhaps the prettiest example of the use of the Pepper on a country driveway is that of "Lovers' Lane," at Loma Linda, an illustration of which is shown on this page.

El Cajon and Bostonia, in San Diego county, have some excellent roadways bordered with these native trees, and though the growth is not so luxuriant as at Riverside, owing doubtless to the more meager supply of water, the result is quite as interesting. A notable grove near Bostonia, of perhaps two or three hundred pepper trees of varying sizes, marks the site of an old corral. Some of these trees are very large, and with apparently only the natural water supply they have enjoyed a series of years of drouth and are free from scale or other objectionable features, and lend a great charm to that part of the valley in which they are situated.

In the Santa Ana Valley, much success has been attained in planting the Sycamore and the Poplar on roadsides. The Acacias are very suitable, too, for this style of planting. I am reminded at this point that Santa Barbara county denuded the ground of various fine Acacias a few years ago under the impression that the trees were breeding(?) scale!

In El Cajon, magnificent specimens of Acacia floribunda, Acacia dealbata, Acacia decurrens, and Acacia pycmanthe flourish on every side of the great Bostonia ranch, and are apparently able to offer a clean bill of health.

I must not forget to recommend to my farmer friends that very beautiful but somewhat maligned tree, Grevillea robusta. I have never heard a single objection to the Grevillea, or "Silk Oak," save its constant leaf dropping, which is of course an annoyance to the (tidy I say?) over-neat and tidy housewife of the city yard. For my part, I love to see the fallen leaves, and also the country highway this disposition cannot be objectionable. The Grevillea is a rapid grower, will stand much drouth and heat, and is, at its best, a most graceful and bright-looking tree.

I do not recommend the evergreen trees, such as the Monterey Cypress, for country roads. They gather and harbor small animals and are, I think, much more fitting to the trim and tidy shrubberies, and groups trees in well-kept city lots. To be sure breaks are needed, there seems to be no quite take the place of the Monterey Cy

Trees for City Streets.

There is so much to be said on this complicated subject that I shall be obliged for this time to mention only a few trees that are not as much used as they should be, and at some other time devote more space to the subject. With just a reference therefore to the fact that the Palm family and the Conifers furnish a large number of desirable sidewalk trees I will mention first Jacaranda Mimosæfolia as a tree of evergreen foliage, feathery and graceful, showing in the early summer a wealth of showy flowers. An avenue or even a block bordered by these trees of uniform size would be a delight to the eye. Callistemon speciosus has been successfully grown in Santa Barbara, and with its splendid crimson trusses of bloom is a wonderful sight through a long period of the year. This tree is sometimes known as the "Bottle Brush tree," and is evergreen in its habit. Acacia retinodes, or floribunda, is the only one of the Acacias that is really successful for sidewalk planting, since it does not grow too large and will bear a good deal of trimming. Many of the Acacias are finer flowered, but are too spreading in their habit for sidewalk planting. The Magnolia should be more freely planted, as should be the Camphor (Cinnamomum camphora.)

Of the Eucalypti I really doubt the success of any save E. robusta in city streets. The Texas Umbrella is an excellent tree for residence streets. The Poplar (Lombardy) and the Sycamore may be so trained as to be acceptable. Of the deciduous trees I specially like and can recommend the Elm and the Maple. As regards planting—the best way is to consult the best nurserymen of your locality, since conditions differ. I will say, however, that few people realize how much difference "right planting" makes to the tree in the years to come.

In my own garden, for instance, there is a hard-pan three or four feet below the surface. The tiny tree will in time reaching down to this, and a careless gardener might overlook it with the result that in a couple of years' time my tiny tree would be at a standstill, or become ill-shapen because of its hampered root condition. The hard-pan may be drilled, or blown up with dynamite, but I have found a simple and successful method, that lacks any dangerous element, that of using quick-lime. In the bottom of the hole made for the tree drill or pick into the hardpan, and insert a pound or so of quick-lime. Cover this over with earth, packing it carefully. Then turn in water. There will occur a slight explosion which will crack the hardpan in every direction, and the tree roots will thus find their way to the deeper soil opened before them.

There is a pantry back of the dining-room connected with the kitchen, and convenient hallways lead to the rear door. The porch extends the entire width of the house front, and attractive bay windows are planned for the library, the parlor and the dining-room.

There are four spacious, well-lighted chambers on the second floor, each having plenty of closet room and one good-sized bathroom.

There is a balcony, too, and it is somewhat amazing to the average lay mind how it is possible to evolve plans for so much comfort and so much room out of the space allowed for the house and the cost estimated.

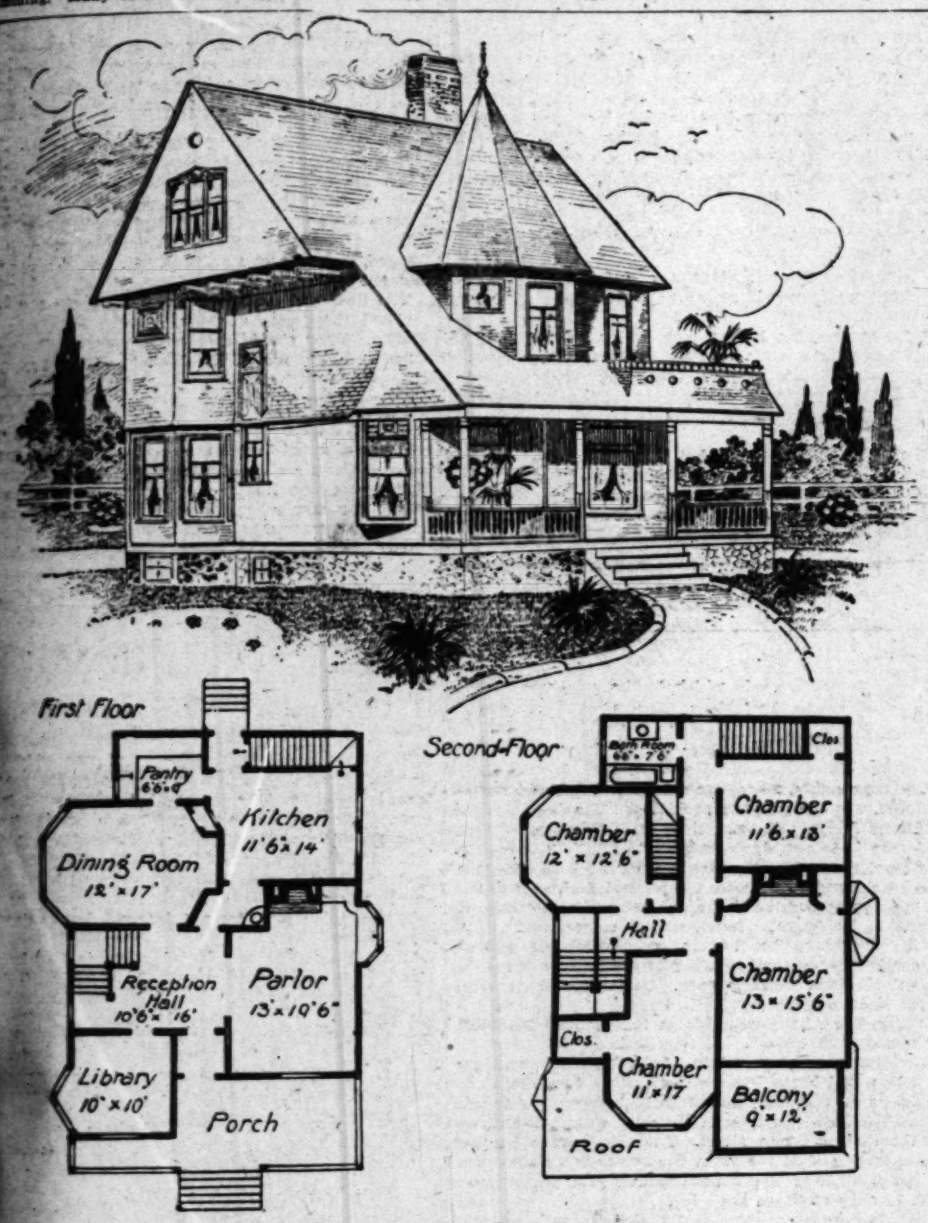
PLANS FOR A CONVENIENT TWO-STORY HOUSE.

By a Special Contributor.

CAN you picture in your mind's eye a prettier home than this, to be built for $2300? The plans for this dwelling call for a two-story frame upon a stone foundation, and cemented cellar. All of the advantages of this home are not to be seen upon the exterior. The ground plans of the first and second floors show an interior admirably arranged for the comforts of a good-sized family.

On the first floor, the entrance hall from a spacious porch leads to a larger reception hall, which opens both into the parlor on the right and a library on the left. The stairway leads to a second floor from the reception hall, and the dining-room and kitchen plans are most skillfully arranged, the former measuring 12x17 feet and the latter 11½x14.



A PRETTY AND CONVENIENT HOME.

MODERN BIBLICAL IGNORANCE.

The prevalent optimism concerning the present condition of American education as a whole is broken by an almost unanimous confession of failure in one particular. The typical young American of today, it is generally admitted, does not know the Bible as his father knew it. "It is apparent," begins a recent resolution of the National Educational Association, "that familiarity with the English Bible as a masterpiece of literature is rapidly decreasing among the pupils in our schools." In all the comments that have been provoked by the rest of the resolution, there has been scarcely any attempt to question the truth of this preamble. A few years ago public opinion, within the churches, at least, was shocked by President Thwing's revelation of the ignorance of a number of college students whose acquaintance with biblical allusions and quotations he had tested by means of an examination paper. Since then, the decadence of American education in this respect has been the topic of many jeremiads from the pulpit and in the press, journalists lamenting that the style of speech and writing has consequently deteriorated, and preachers bewailing a resultant lowering of the moral standard.—[Herbert W. Horwill, in September Atlantic.

LOVE IS THE MAINSPRING.

Political economists have told us that self-interest is the mainspring of industry. It is not true. Love is the mainspring of industry. It is love for home and the wife and the children that keeps all the busy wheels of industry revolving, that calls the factory hands early to the mill, that nerves the arm of the blacksmith working at his forge, that inspires the farmer at his plow and the merchant at his desk; that gives courage to the soldier and patience to the teacher. Erskine was asked how he dared, as an unknown barrister, face a hostile court and insist on his right to be heard. "I felt my children," he replied, "tugging at my robe and saying, Here is your chance, father, to get us bread." It is this vision of the children, dependent on us, that inspires us all in the battle of life. It is for our homes and our children we maintain our churches. . . .

Whether we cultivate a farm, or operate a factory, or manage a store, or build and conduct a railroad, or paint pictures, or write books, or preach sermons, or enact and enforce laws—whatever we do, the end of our activity is the nurture and training of our children in this primary school, which we call life, in preparation for some life, we know not what, hereafter.—[Rev. Lyman Abbott, in September Atlantic.

FROM A SOCIETY MAN'S DIARY.

I narrowly escaped a great humiliation, dining with the Smiths, last night. Only the superb tact of Mrs. Smith saved me.

I had drunk my wine.

"Fill Mr. Jones's glass," said Smith to his butler.

As the man approached me, decanter in hand, I broke into a cold perspiration. For in that moment I recalled that I had brought no money with me.

Doubtless I looked the horror I felt. Anyway, Mrs. Smith divined my predicament, and quietly lent me a dollar, with which I feed the butler.—[Life.

The Tale of a Coat.

ONE of the most singular examples of the working of government red tape is recounted in the Spectator.

A certain volunteer battalion, whose headquarters are within two hours of London, determined to adopt the service uniform, and on January 10 submitted their sartorian interpretation of the government regulations to headquarters.

"It so happens that our contractor's factory is quite close to the war office, so that the arrangement, it might be thought, would have been quite easy, but from their regimental headquarters the specimen garment had to be sent to the district staff at Portsmouth, and when they were done with it they dispatched it again to the second army corps at Salisbury. From Salisbury it was sent direct to Pall Mall, whence it went back to Salisbury and Portsmouth, from Portsmouth to the regimental district office to the volunteer orderly room, from the orderly room back to the London tailor."

The tailor was not afflicted with red tape, so he ran across the road to Pall Mall with the garment, and not having been able to ascertain the number of strands of worsted in the shoulder knot, confessed that to save time he had used his own judgment in the matter. Now, to resume the words of our correspondent:

"Again the jacket started to our headquarters, to the regimental district office, to Portsmouth, to Salisbury, to Pall Mall, but by that time it had been discovered that the tailor had used one more strand of worsted in the shoulder-knot than was demanded by the regulations.

"This was duly set forth in one of those letters headed like an apothecary's prescription which emanate from the home of red tape. It said that there must be three strands and not four in the shoulder-knot of our service jacket. This alteration had to be submitted and resubmitted to Pall Mall, Salisbury, Portsmouth, regimental district office, headquarters, London.

"Then the daring tailor tried to get Pall Mall to say that the coat was approved of, but this appeal was disallowed, and once more the jacket was started on a perambulation from the tailor's to Pall Mall, and from Pall Mall to the tailor's, via various places in the south of England."

If one strand of worsted in the shoulder-knot of the uniform involved all this passing to and fro, imagination shudders to contemplate what would be involved by the invention of a new boot.—[Country Life.

Would Lee Have Won?

"NO battle of any war more forcibly than Gettysburgs illustrates the truth that officers at a distance from the field cannot, with any wisdom, attempt to control the movements of troops actively engaged. On the first day neither Gen. Early nor Gen. Ewell could possibly have been cognizant of the situation at the time I was ordered to halt.

"The whole of that portion of the Union army in my front was in inextricable confusion and in flight. They were necessarily in flight, for my troops were upon the flank and rapidly sweeping down the lines. The firing upon my men had almost ceased. Large bodies of the Union troops were throwing down their arms and surrendering, because in disorganized and confused masses they were wholly powerless either to check the movement or return the fire.

"As far down the lines as my eye could reach, the Union troops were in retreat. Those at a distance were still resisting, but giving ground, and it was only necessary for me to press forward in order to insure the same results, which invariably follow such flank movements. In less than one-half hour my troops would have swept up and over those hills, the possession of which was of such momentous consequence.

"It is not surprising, with a full realization of the consequences of a halt, that I should have refused at first to obey the order. Not until the third or fourth order of the most peremptory character reached me did I obey. I think I should have risked the consequences of disobedience even then, but for the fact that the order to halt was accompanied with the explanation that Gen. Lee, who was several miles away, did not wish to give battle at Gettysburg.

"It is stated on good authority that Gen. Lee said, some time before his death, that if Jackson had been there he would have won in this battle a great and possibly decisive victory. I cannot vouch for the truth of this statement, as I did not hear it, but no soldier in a great crisis ever wished more ardently for a deliverer's hand than I wished for one hour of Jackson, when I was ordered to halt."—[Gen. John B. Gordon, in Scribner's Magazine.

The Truth About "Fighting Joe."

GEN. JOSEPH DICKINSON of Washington, D. C. was Adjutant-General and Chief of Staff to General Hooker during the greater part of the famous hero's service in the Civil War, and saw more of him, enjoyed more of his confidence and knew him more intimately than any other man of his time.

General Dickinson, who rose from the rank of lieutenant to that of colonel during his service under Hooker was as close as a brother to him from June, 1861, to June, 1863, when Hooker resigned from the Army of the Potomac and joined that of the Tennessee, during that time holding a position which may be loosely described as that of military private secretary.

Gen. Dickinson has none too much patience with those critics who accused Hooker of favoring the establishment of a military dictatorship during the war. He says that no man who knew Hooker would ever suggest such a thing, and to prove it he related an incident in his own experience.

He said: "Soon after Hooker took command of the Army of the Potomac a party of prominent and wealthy business men, most of them from the vicinity of New York, came down to Virginia from Washington to visit the new commander.

"They hung around camp for a day or two without making their object known, meanwhile exciting a great deal of curiosity. Finally they went back to Washington, urging me very strongly to go with them, which I did, with the permission of Gen. Hooker.

"They dined me and wined me while I remained their guest, but I was unable to get any definite idea of their object, save that from hints they allowed to drop now and then I concluded they wished me to do what they had not dared to do themselves—propose to Gen. Hooker that he declare himself dictator and give the Washington authorities to understand that he should prosecute the war without any interference.

"When I returned to camp I said nothing about the matter to Gen. Hooker, but to some of my brother officers who were curious to know what my entertainers were after I allowed a hint or two of my suspicions to drop. They eventually came to the ears of Hooker, who said to me: 'Joe, why didn't you tell me about the proposition of your Washington friends?' I replied: 'Because I had no desire that you should kick me out of the service.'

"At that Hooker remarked: 'You know me pretty well, don't you, Joe?'

"I consider that incident a sufficient indication of Hooker's sentiments in regard to dictatorship," said Gen. Dickinson, adding:

"Hooker was an honest man and a patriot, and as such he sometimes did criticise his superiors, but never with malice in his heart, and however much he might criticise his superior, he always obeyed the order of that superior implicitly. His commander always had his loyal support."

Gen. Dickinson declares that there was really a strong bond of sympathy between Lincoln and Hooker, but that a coterie of admirers of other generals in Washington deceived the President into thinking Hooker not altogether what he should have been.—[Boston Globe

ANIMAL STORIES.

Towser and the Tiger.

THE title of this tale, which, by the way, bears no resemblance to the fable of the wolf in sheep's clothing, is "A Dog in a Tiger's Skin." It chronicles facts which took place yesterday in the back yard of Frank H. Stubbs, No. 2006 Indiana avenue.

The tiger's skin, made into a beautiful rug, and valued at $1000, was the property of Stubbs. The dog belonged to Edgar A. Redpath, who lives at 77 Twentieth street, and who is known downtown as "Eddie." Stubbs is a rug fancier. Besides the tiger's skin, the head of which has been mounted with all the natural fierceness of expression preserved, he is the possessor of many fine old Persians, Bokharas, Irans, and Kirmanshaws. Also, until yesterday, he had a proprietary, or, rather, an employer's, interest in a big maid-of-all-work named Mary. Now the maid is gone. So is the tiger's skin, or, at least, a large part of it.

"Mary, I want the rugs beaten today," said Stubbs.

"Yes, sir," said Mary.

The girl took the rugs into the back yard, hung them on a line, and began beating them. The dust flew from a big Persian square, next to which hung the tiger's skin. The sturdy strokes of the stick caused every rug on the line to dance about. The tiger's skin became particularly active, the great head swinging to and fro in the wind, and the wide-stretched jaws seeming to ache to snap off some one's leg.

At this interesting moment "Eddie" Redpath and his bulldog passed by. That is to say, Eddie passed. The bulldog paused to gaze. The tiger's head was challenging him to mortal combat. He leaped the fence, and in two long bounds had his strong jaws fastened in the neck of the former king of the jungle.

"Scat!" shouted Mary. "Get out, you beast; you'll ruin the rug."

The bulldog gave no heed. The tiger's skin had fallen from the line and completely enveloped the dog. Muffled growls could be heard as a mass of yellow fur rolled about the yard.

"Get out!" repeated Mary.

But the dog could not get out. That was the trouble. He had become so completely tangled up that his own master could not have extricated him. There was the sound of rending skin.

"He's trying to eat his way out," soliloquized Mary. And she spoke the truth.

When the dog reappeared the rug was in fragments. His master looked woefully at the pieces scattered about. He knew Stubbs, and he knew the value of the tiger skin rug.

"I have got to get all the pieces together or give up $1000," he said. "Part of the rug is inside the dog. I don't believe in vivisection, but I am afraid I shall have to waive my scruples. They and the dog together are not worth $1000.—[Chicago Inter-Ocean.

A Cat in Time.

A BROWN and white cat, nine months old, saved two persons from being burned to death at the Warren House Inn, near Wokingham, early yesterday morning.

It was left sleeping on a mat outside a bedroom door when Mr. William Bailey, the brother of the [illegible] retired to rest on Wednesday night. About 12:30 [illegible] he was awakened by the cat patting his face with [illegible] paw and purring loudly. He stroked the animal [illegible] went to sleep again.

A minute or two later he was again awakened by [illegible] animal, which this time scratched his face and [illegible] piteously. Then Mr. Bailey woke up thoroughly [illegible] found the room full of smoke. Putting on a [illegible] he ran to the room of his brother's wife, where the [illegible] and smoke were nearly overpowering.

It was with difficulty that Mrs. George Bailey [illegible] carried downstairs, followed by the cat. In a [illegible] two the house was a mass of flames and the [illegible] roof fell in. The place was completely gutted. The [illegible] was, therefore, directly responsible for saving [illegible] lives.—[London Mail.

The animals displayed little interest at the [illegible] settling themselves comfortably, and even seemed [illegible] enjoy the trip, but when the balloon was released [illegible] shot upward, they became terrified, crouched [illegible] bottom of the car, and whined piteously.

Soon afterward a sudden down-rush of gas nearly [illegible] located both men and animals. M. Du Chateau [illegible] and the others were made ill.

Fooling a Tiger.

AN INCIDENT which seemed to show that a [illegible] sense of smell is not very acute is reported from [illegible] dia. A Capt. Capt. Macquoid had time to drop behind a [illegible] rock only three feet and a half high when the [illegible] came out, crawled over the ledge without noticing [illegible] officer, and made for the orderly who had tripped [illegible]

He seized the native by the leg when Capt. [illegible] quoid lodged a bullet in his spine and then shot [illegible] through the head with a second bullet.—[Detroit [illegible] Press.

Animal Delusions.

THE mole is said to be deprived of eyes, which is [illegible] true. They are very small, which prevents them [illegible] from being injured by the earth through which they [illegible] rows. Plant for Carpinteria.

THE Santa Barbara Press has the following [illegible] gard to a new industry for that section, said [illegible] the first of its kind anywhere in the world: [illegible] The Carpinteria wharf, together with fourteen [illegible] and, were sold yesterday by Frank Smith to [illegible] er of Los Angeles. On a portion of this land [illegible] be installed in the near future the first solar [illegible] plant for the manufacturing of salt from sea [illegible] process is a new one and has been thoroughly [illegible] small scale. The plant to be put in at Carpinteria [illegible] be a large one, and the output will be limited [illegible] by the quantity of sea water that can be pumped [illegible] great reservoir.

The purchaser, Mr. Carter, is the inventor [illegible] furnace, which bids fair to supplant the [illegible] for many purposes, particularly where fuel [illegible] ive. It is particularly adapted to pumping [illegible] districts where the sun is usually unobscured [illegible] clouds.

[illegible] water carries a small per cent. of gold in solution [illegible] there have been many processes invented [illegible] ing it. At the time of the Nome excitement [illegible] invented a process by the use of his solar [illegible] by which he expected to extract a fortune [illegible] waters that washed the golden sands of the [illegible] ape. It proved a success in more ways than [illegible] it collected a small quantity of gold, it also [illegible] ded the salt and left the water as fresh as [illegible] a mountain spring. Mr. Carter abandoned [illegible] to extract gold and perfected a process [illegible] salt on a commercial scale. It has been patented [illegible] will be put in operation for the first time at [illegible]

In addition to the salt plant, Mr. Carter will [illegible] tory for the manufacture of solar furnaces [illegible] ly purchased yesterday. About two years ago Mr. Carter leased a portion [illegible] of which he purchased yesterday for the purpose [illegible] the plant, and had considerable excavating [illegible] but owing to some hitches about the patents [illegible] ded work until the matter could be straightened [illegible] out. Now that it has been perfected, he has [illegible] difficulty in getting all the capital required, and [illegible] of leasing he has purchased.

Several men have already been put to work, to [illegible] the excavations commenced two years ago. [illegible] was in town yesterday to attend to the transfer [illegible] property, and left last night for Los Angeles, [illegible] from next week to begin active operations."

The Development of the Great Southwest.

OUR MATERIAL GROWTH.

WHAT IS BEING DONE IN THE FIELD OF PRODUCTION.

Compiled for The Times.

The Times will be pleased to receive and publish in this department brief, plainly-written articles, giving trustworthy information regarding important developments in Southern California, and additions to industry, such articles to be confined to actual work in progress, or about to begin, excluding rumors and contemplated enterprises.

A First for Carpinteria.

THE Santa Barbara Press has the following, in regard to a new industry for that section, said to be the first of its kind anywhere in the world:

"The Carpinteria wharf, together with fourteen acres of land, were sold yesterday by Frank Smith to Albert Minor of Los Angeles. On a portion of this land there will be installed in the near future the first solar furnace plant for the manufacturing of salt from sea water. The process is a new one and has been thoroughly tested on a small scale. The plant to be put in at Carpinteria will be a large one, and the output will be limited only by the quantity of sea water that can be pumped into the great reservoir.

"The purchaser, Mr. Carter, is the inventor of the solar furnace, which bids fair to supplant the fuel furnace for many purposes, particularly where fuel is expensive. It is particularly adapted to pumping plants in districts where the sun is usually unobstructed in clouds.

"The water carries a small per cent. of gold in solution and there have been many processes invented for extracting it. At the time of the Nome excitement, Mr. Carter invented a process by the use of his solar furnace by which he expected to extract a fortune from the sands that washed the golden sands of the northern shore. It proved a success in more ways than one. While it collected a small quantity of gold, it also precipitated the salt and left the water as fresh as that from a mountain spring. Mr. Carter abandoned his plan to extract gold and perfected a process to extract salt on a commercial scale. It has been patented and will be put in operation for the first time at Carpinteria.

"In addition to the salt plant, Mr. Carter will locate a factory for the manufacture of solar furnaces on the property purchased yesterday. These furnaces, for where there is a growing demand, will be made of all sizes from one to one hundred thousand horse power. The steam plant using the solar furnace is now in operation in Los Angeles, where thirty-two horse power is developed from a six-horse-power boiler.

"About two years ago Mr. Carter leased a portion of land to be purchased yesterday for the purpose of installing the plant, and had considerable excavating done, but owing to some hitches about the patent, he ceased work until the matter could be straightened out. Now that it has been perfected, he has had little difficulty in getting all the capital required, and in a few days he has purchased.

"Several men have already been put to work, the excavations commenced two years ago. Mr. Carter was in town yesterday to attend to the transfer of property, and left last night for Los Angeles, but will return next week to begin active operations."

Eucalyptus Grove.

A REDLANDS correspondent of the Santa Ana Blade writes as follows in regard to a great eucalyptus grove, which is to be planted in Orange county:

"Chase & Mills, the nurserymen, have been awarded a contract to grow 300,000 red gums (Eucalyptus Rostrata) for Dwight Whiting. This forest of young trees will be set out on Mr. Whiting's El Toro ranch to be used for railroad ties, telegraph poles and piling. It is the largest order ever given for nursery stock of any kind in this State. It requires 1300 boxes 18x30 inches to propagate the young stock in. The seed of the tree is very small and contains much chaff, this is sifted through several small mesh screens before planting. Mr. Richman has invented a new method of planting this seed. He has a pan that fits inside the planting box, this pan is held down firmly upon the soil, contains 240 small holes, the seed is brushed into the holes, the pan tapped lightly and removed, and a tiny seed or two will be found in the proper place in regular rows, over them is dusted a light covering of leaf mould, the seed is then watered several times each day until in five days the sprout shows above ground. This method saves the resetting from the seed bed in which they are grown as the tiny plant reaches the desired size, four inches without being handled. Their large lath house is already almost full of young plants of various sizes, the older of which will have to be removed to the walnut orchard to make room for the balance of the young plants. The first planting will be made in December, and from then until spring a small army of men will have to be employed to cultivate and care for this forest."

Irrigation on the Desert.

A dispatch, from the Phoenix Stockman, shows that Arizona county has gone ahead with a most valuable and necessary improvement, that The Times recently suggested for adoption by the Supervisors of counties in Southeastern California:

"The Board of Supervisors of Coconino county has taken a step in a matter, which, although it may seem small in itself, represents no small cost to the county; but the result of their work means much for the security and comfort of travelers in a desert country, and probably the saving of numerous lives. The Board has decided to have erected at cross-roads and at points where roads fork, finger boards pointing out the direction and stating the distance to places ahead, and where a water supply is some distance from the road, finger boards will point the way and state the distance. The finger board has been the custom for ages in the eastern country, where one could not get lost if he tried, but simply for the information and convenience of the persons who travel. If it is a good plan there, why not more so in a country where missing your way at a fork of the road may mean a weary travel of fifty or a hundred miles without opportunity of getting set right, and this most frequently over a dry road—a road having no water supply. It has meant death in the past, and we are therefore very glad to see the old plan adopted of informing the lonely traveler in which direction his journey lies. It is something that each and every county should do, and the law should be very stict with reference to the destruction of such sign boards. Of course it may be argued that a person traveling in a lonely section of country where he is not acquainted, ought not to attempt the journey alone, but have a guide who has a knowledge of the country. This is frequently done, but the danger lies with the individuals who, because of their unfamiliarity with the country, do not take this precaution. At any rate, such expenditure on the part of a county cannot be considered other than a wise and humane one, and other counties in Arizona could profit by following Coconino's example."

Rio Grande Valley.

THE El Paso News reports that local people are beginning to interest themselves in the development of the lands of the Rio Grande Valley. The News says, in regard to a company now being formed:

"The members are all local merchants and business men, who have become convinced of the inherent wealth of the soil and have determined to develop it. They will, as a starter, secure 600 acres of the best alfalfa land in the valley and divide it into farms of forty acres. Each farm is to be equipped with an irrigation service for pumping, and a large pumping plant, with wells, is to be installed in the center of the tract, or in a position which can readily supply all the water needed to the adjacent farms controlled by the company. The scheme is a new one, never before having been tried in this section. Though entirely experimental in its nature, the promoters believe that it will be successful, as they have made tests which show that they can easily secure wells which will irrigate the sections needed to carry out their plans.

"When they finish their pumping plant, they will sow the lands in alfalfa and other farm produce, and rent them to tenants. It is claimed that the company already has more demands for its lands than it has lands to rent, and that the prospects for its future are very bright.

"Its active operations will not be begun until the late fall, but it is the company's intention to have its plants and farms in operation by next spring."

Citrus Culture on Commercial Lines.

FOLLOWING is from a recent article in the Pacific Fruit World, descriptive of the Azusa ranch, one of the leading citrus fruit ranches of California:

"The Azusa Ranch, containing 5000 acres, situate at the base of the main range of the Sierra Madre at 800 feet elevation, lying twenty-three miles east of Los Angeles (the main track of the Santa Fé Railroad running through it,) has been one of the noted ranches of Southern California on account of its early settlement and cultivation, its location, climate, richness of soil and abundant water for irrigation from the San Gabriel River, running along its western line.

"This extensive citrus property is owned by a close corporation with one million dollars capital, known as the Azusa Foothill Citrus Company. James Slauson is president, and J. T. Lindley secretary and manager.

"Almost the earliest planting of vineyards, olives and oranges was on this ranch, and a flouring mill run by water power from the San Gabriel River was running on this ranch early in the fifties.

"In the year 1886—that time when Southern California was just waking up to the great possibilities in citrus culture, J. S. Slauson, then a banker of Los Angeles, bought the entire ranch.

"In 1888 he selected something over 600 acres of the best portion of the ranch, and commenced planting citrus fruits, and he and his children, in separate parts and holdings mainly under the supervision of his son, James Slauson, now the president of this company, continued planting until the 600 acres were covered with citrus trees. The varieties planted being about as follows: 125 acres lemons, 250 acres Washington navels, 75 acres Thompson Improved navels, 200 acres Valencia Lates, 10 acres St. Michaels, 10 acres Tangerines, 5 acres Ruby Bloods, 5 acres Grape Fruit.

"With all these varieties, this company is in position to fill orders of customers of carloads of assorted varieties at any time.

"These properties were among the earliest to join the Azusa-Covina-Glendora Citrus Association, then embracing Covina and Glendora, and fruits of these orchards went far to make the fine reputation of the 'Stag' and 'Pointer' brands under which the last named association shipped its oranges.

"This was the condition of these properties in 1902, at which time all these properties were consolidated and incorporated under the name, 'Azusa Foothill Citrus Company; capital, $1,000,000; James Slauson, President; J. T. Lindley, Secretary and Manager, Los Angeles, Cal.; Azusa, Cal.'

"It is an independent association with one of the largest and best appointed packing-houses in California, with all the latest and best machinery and appliances, run and lighted by electricity that packing can be done night and day, in the busy season. This company packs no fruit except from its own orchards. Its pack is being made, and will be sent out under the labels, 'Blue Seal'—fancy; 'Red Seal'—choice; 'Green Crown'—standard.

"The property, for convenience and economical administration, is divided into three divisions or parcels; each parcel has its own foreman, barns, stables, and houses for foreman and men, and its separate teams, tools and outfits. These foremen are not ordinary men, but men of judgment and thorough intelligence, commanding large salaries, knowing their business.

"In the operation of the three divisions we noticed that one foreman would no more think of borrowing tools or teams from the other, without privilege, than if they were distinctly separate, and we suspect that each division is kept in keen rivalry to produce best results.

"There are two large cement reservoirs, and about seven miles of cement ditches for carrying and distributing water and irrigating the orchards in the best and most economical manner."

Irrigation in Orange County.

THE Orange Post recently published a special edition. Following is an extract from an article descriptive of the irrigation system around Orange:

"The mesa, lying between Burruel Point on the north and the damp lands below Santa Ana on the south, and between the Santiago foothills on the east and the Santa Ana River on the west, contains about thirty square miles, five-sixths of which is irrigated from the Santa Ana River and a large part of the other sixth from the Santiago Creek.

"There are two companies equally interested in the waters of the creek: the Serrano Water Company, which supplies the Villa Park region on the north side; and the John T. Carpenter Water Company which supplies the El Modena territory on the south side. These companies have a ten-acre reservoir on the Barham ranch, and a concrete dam down to bedrock across the cañon, which, with the natural flow of the creek, enable them to water well all the arable land above that irrigated from the river. Since no salaried officers or paid employés are maintained, and the stockholders themselves clean the ditches and turn the water from one to the other, the expenses of these companies are light—not to exceed twenty-five cents per share per annum—with the actual cost of improvements added, when necessary to make any.

"The waters of the Santa Ana River entering Orange county are divided equally between the two sides. The State Engineer's report for 1888 describes the territory to be irrigated as follows: 'For ten to twelve miles out from the cañon the Santa Ana is flanked by two of the most important irrigation districts in Southern California. That on the south, embracing the well-known towns and neighborhoods of Orange, Santa Ana and Tustin, is served by the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company's canal, and that on the north side by the several works of the Anaheim Union Water Company, whose district is best known by the general name of Anaheim. In addition to this there is an old independent work on the north side, known as the 'Yorba ditch,' since merged in the Anaheim Union Water Company.

"The water belonging on the south side is diverted into a main canal ten feet wide on bottom and fifteen feet on top, and five feet deep, with a capacity of 7500 inches, where lined with cement. There are about eight miles of this main canal, eighteen miles of main branches, and probably one hundred miles of laterals. The system spreads out like a tree with the top down hill, and the branches all on one side, covering more than twenty-five square miles, and reaching to the upper corner of every irrigator's land, the ditches diminishing in size from the seventy-five-head main canal down to the two-head lateral.

"The development of this system of irrigation has been gradual, extending over a period of thirty-three years. The first work on the Chapman ditch was begun in 1870, and water was delivered as far down as Orange the following year. This ditch was turned over to the Semi-Tropic Water Company, which was formed in 1873 by the purchasers of the one hundred miles or more of ditches; about thirty-five miles of the worst portions have been lined with cement, and all the gateways for turning or delivering the water have been made also of cement. From the foregoing it appears that where many other water systems were constructed all at once, this one is still being built; and that while the work done thus far is large in the aggregate, the burdens have been so widely distributed, both as to time and among numbers, that they have not been oppressive to any one."

Among the passengers in the train were an elderly lady and her pretty young niece, also a young gentleman. The train had passed through several tunnels, when the maiden aunt said:

"My dear, we are coming to a long tunnel; you had better sit over on this side."

Pretty Niece: No, aunty, just let me stop where I am. One more tunnel and I am engaged."—[Tit-Bits.

THE WILD ANIMALS OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY.

XIX.—THE CHIPMUNK.

QUEER LITTLE SQUIRRELS OF OUR DESERT WORLD.

By a Special Contributor.

IN writing of the animals of this section of California, my list would indeed be incomplete without some mention of those peculiar little rodents found plentifully on the desert side of our mountains and less abundantly in the dry washes of this edge of the county. Unlike the Chipmunks of the Eastern States, our species is seldom found in trees, but prefers open sandy country, sparsely covered with low brush and in which the digging of the nest hole is not difficult. Chipmunks are especially plentiful at this season of the year, when they may be seen scurrying about with their mouths full of supplies which they are carrying to their holes in preparation for the winter, which to them, in sections of the desert where much snow falls is often severe.

In general, the Chipmunk is more closely related to the Tree Squirrels than to our well-known Ground Squirrels, of which I have already written—but is nevertheless very similar to the latter in mode of life. It is, probably, the quickest animal in its movements of any in the world, not even excepting certain members of the Cat tribe, as any one can testify who has ever attempted to catch or even shoot one as it dodged about among the brush. There are two or three of these little fellows in a cage at Eastlake Park, and those who wish a detailed description should see them there. It is sufficient to say here that this animal is five or six inches in length, with a tail shorter and less bushy than common to most of the Squirrels, while its general color is a brownish gray, usually marked with stripes of white running down the back. In their natural habitat, the Chipmunks are wild and hard to approach, but once caged, they do not seem to care much for man, and go calmly about their business of eating or playing oblivious to all observers.

There are but few species of Chipmunks, two in the Old World, I believe, and five or six in the New. They seem to care little for water, and are abundant in places on the desert many miles from any water hole or spring. Their nest is made in some hole in the ground under a sheltering bush or rock, and usually consists of a long entrance way terminating in a nest chamber of good size and nicely lined with fine grasses, bits of bark fibers, leaves, etc.

In colder regions, the animal sleeps in this secure nest all winter, but on this side of the mountains seldom hibernates at all unless in an exceptionally rainy winter. In spite of this, our Chipmunk follows the example of his Eastern relative, and stores away quantities of food in early fall. The young, four or five in number, are born in late spring and soon commence to run about with the grown animals. They sit up at the entrance to their nest, much after the manner of the common Ground Squirrels, but do not bark as do the latter.

The food of these animals largely consists of roots, succulent weeds, etc., with such nuts and seeds as they may be able to gather from the limited vegetation of this region. In captivity nothing comes amiss as food, and they make admirable pets, though they can never be thoroughly tamed.

Of the Tree Squirrel, California, south of the Tehachepi has but two well-recognized species, though there are about half a hundred American varieties of which number at least a dozen are found in the United States.

Everyone knows the common Gray Squirrel of the East, and our most common Tree Squirrel is its western prototype, the California Gray Squirrel. This animal is found among the oak and pine forests of the mountains, and occasionally about the summits of the highest of our foothills. There is a heavy fine for killing one of these squirrels, and this law should be much more strongly enforced than it is. They are strictly arboreal animals; that is, they live in trees almost altogether, seldom coming to the ground save for the gathering of their food. This consists almost entirely of nuts and fruits, with possibly an occasional bird's egg. The nest, like that of the Eastern Squirrel, is made of leaves, sticks, etc., finely lined and made practically water-proof. They do not hibernate as compared with the Chipmunks, but sleep a great deal of the winter through, however. Instead of storing nuts and other food in their nests, the Tree Squirrels, both species, have caches, so to speak, in hollow trees, where they put by their winter's supply of food. The young are sometimes born in a cavity in some tree, and sometimes in the leafy nest mentioned above. They are not so active when small as the Chipmunks, nor do they leave the nest so soon.

Up around Fernando, in the adjacent mountains there are, or were a few years ago, many Gray Squirrels, and, being protected, they were quite fearless. Hunters hereabouts commonly call them "Black Squirrels," but they are not, to any noticeable degree, different from the Gray Squirrels of the Eastern and Southern States. This is the species commonly kept as a pet, and there are many of them in captivity in Los Angeles, not alone in the parks, but in private families.

There now remains but one species, the Red or Fox Squirrel. This Squirrel is smaller than the one just described, and in its Eastern variety is quite plentiful, in fact in some localities it seems to be superseding the Gray Squirrel, but I have never seen a Red Squirrel in California of whose identity I was sure, and if they do occur in the mountains of Los Angeles county, they must be rare. The natural histories give accounts of an animal known as Richardson's Squirrel, but I have never seen it, unless several Red Squirrels which are caged in one of our parks belong to this species—which I very much doubt.

In the East and North the Red Squirrel is quite different in habits from the Gray variety. It seldom hibernates, being seen in all kinds of weather. No snow is too deep to be covered with its tracks, and no day so inclement as to keep it indoors. It does not store food so extensively as the Gray Squirrel, but "rustles" all winter through, and steals the supplies of its larger relative with impunity. It is commonly known as the "Chickaree," and is an unrelenting enemy of the Gray Squirrels, being shot by game wardens in many localities to protect the former. The Chickaree does not build a nest, but lives in hollow trunks of trees and other cavities when possible.

THE MOCKING BIRD.

A COURAGEOUS AND DEVOTED FAMILY MAN AND A MARVELOUS MUSICIAN.

By a Special Contributor.

All Southern California, or the Sunny South, as we are pleased to call it, is rich in bird life, as well as plant life. And of course one cannot love and study one without learning a little about the other. But of all the birds (and I love them all,) I find the mocking bird the most interesting. He is intelligent and has just enough of the John L. about him to appeal to one who loves a saucy, independent bit of bird life. There is one particular mocker who has made his home on Florence Hill for four years. He is known to the residents and admired by the tourists for his wonderful singing qualities. He is so full of joy that he always wants to get on the tallest tree or most prominent chimney to pour out his thanks. In the early morning hours, before old Sol shows his bright face, he will sing you the sweetest, most plaintive hymn that mortal ever listened to, an original version of "Come thou fount of every blessing, tune my heart to sing Thy grace; streams of mercy never ceasing call for songs of loudest praise."

You would be a queer compound that would not be made a better man or woman for having listened to him.

He is an industrious fellow, and of course he has a devoted wife. She is severely plain in her dress, wearing the Quaker shades of gray the year round. One day about the middle of February, we discovered that they were going to settle down to housekeeping. They both worked hard to complete a comfortable nest. They had selected the largest cypress tree on Florence Hill for their future home. Good Wife would sit patiently on this, and her good, kind husband would sing all kinds of songs for her. I am sure some of his tunes were in rag time, at least they were jolly enough. Then he would go away and come back with the fattest worm he could find to give his lady love, after which he would seem to sing her a little good advice; that is, to take a little needed rest; for she would go away for perhaps a half hour, while he cared for the eggs for her.

In just fourteen days there was a great commotion in the nest, and when we peeked in there were four young birds that looked for the world like brown caterpillars, with extremely big, yellow mouths that were always open for something to eat. You should have seen what a good provider Mr. Mocker was! The little ones were fed ever so many times an hour, and grow!—you could fairly see them, they grew so fast.

But alas! just about the time Mr. Mocker was expecting his children to go out in the world for themselves, a Chinese cook, thinking to do us a favor, brought us nest, and birds. He thought that, because we watched and admired them so much, we wanted them. Well, what to do now we did not know. We could not fit the nest back, and we could not turn so many young birds out in the yard, as there were several cats about. So we got a cage and took them five blocks (each block six hundred feet long,) and put them on an east porch. The next morning, Father and Mother Mocker came down and fed them, and they have fed those birds ever since. There was a good-sized cat who had been in the habit of making Duke, the fox terrier, stand aside, but Pugilist Mocker would make that cat seek shelter and stay there, most of the time. And we, too, when we attended to the cage, were inclined to follow the example set by Puss, as it makes one just a trifle nervous to have two strong birds fly right at you and screech within two inches of your ear: "An eye for an eye!"

The mockers do no harm to a place, but are a benefit to a garden. They are very courageous, and would fight anything to protect their young. When they are so unfortunate as to lose them, they mourn for some time.

It is a great pity to destroy any song bird, as they are surely one of the greatest of the many attractions of our lovely Sunny Southland.

TO THE PAST.

Whatever of true life there was in thee
Leaps in our age's veins;
Wield still thy bent and wrinkled empery,
And shake thine idle chains—
To thee thy dress is clinging,
For us thy martyrs die, thy prophets see,
Thy poets still are singing.

Here 'mid the bleak waves of our strife and care
Float the green Fortunate Isles
Where all thy hero spirits dwell, and share
Our martyrdoms and toils;
The present moves attended
With all of brave and excellent and fair
That made the old time splendid.

A PEANUT PARTY.

A NOVEL AND INTERESTING ENTERTAINMENT SUGGESTED BY A BOY.

By a Special Contributor.

Mrs. Carmichael was very fond of boys; she liked them all sizes and ages, no matter how rough and awkward they were. A boy's best side was always sure to turn uppermost before she had him in hand fifteen minutes. Perhaps for the reason that she had no children of her own—she had a thorough love and understanding of other people's children, especially boys.

She always had a Sunday-school class of boys, and there was one persistent member who refused promotion half a dozen times, rather than submit to a separation.

Every year Mrs. Carmichael arranged some entertainment for her class, and there was no more delightful day in the calendar than that which the boys spent running over the beautiful grounds, and winding up with some novel entertainment and refreshments in the big old homestead.

One year, Mrs. Carmichael, having issued her invitations, was driven to the wall when it came to selecting a novelty in the way of entertainment. Everything seemed exhausted. There had been charades, and tableaux, and potato races, and guessing games, and even tricks by a professional, among innumerable ventures.

"If I don't have something new, my boys will lose their faith," she said at last, taking her "steady" Sunday-school pupil into her confidence.

"Then I wouldn't give peanuts for them all," he declared.

Mrs. Carmichael clapped her hands.

"Peanuts!" she cried. "Samuel, you are an inspiration, and as a reward, you shall stay in my class for another year. I shall give a peanut party!"

This she proceeded to do without more delay; and for her purpose on the eventful day, she bought the entire output of a peanut stand in the neighborhood, securing about four quarts. Then she hid them, one by one, in every nook and angle she could think of; it was really wonderful how even that big house could have hiding places enough, but she finally stowed them all away, well out of sight.

"Now," she said, as the boys streamed into the house after a tour of out-door inspection, "there's to be a big peanut hunt. I have four quarts of them hidden on this lower floor, which must be found in a half hour's time. Here's a paper bag for each of you; he who finds the largest number of peanuts, gets a prize. When the half hour is up, I will stop the hunt, and we will count results, after which, to be quite sure our four quarts are secured, we will prove it by this," and she held up a tightly painted quart measure. "Now then, away with you! Go where you please, but be careful of bric-a-brac and china."

With a shout they were off, and a livelier half hour was never passed; each second furnished excitement, as the peanuts lurked in the most unexpected places, and the boys found them, with deafening whoops and yells, that sent Mrs. Carmichael's hands to her ears.

At last, time was called, and the hunters came trooping in with their spoils. Little Will Vance, the baby of the class, secured the prize—a fine jack-knife—because he was small enough to slip into impossible places, and it was found after careful measurement, that four quarts exactly had been gathered in during the hunt.

Altogether, the peanut party was a success, and the boys went home with the firm conviction that Mrs. Carmichael was the very nicest and jolliest boy of them all.

JIMMY'S FREE BATH.

HE HELPED IN GIVING HIM AND HIS DOG A GOOD HOME.

By a Special Contributor.

Jimmy had fooled the policeman three times; being small and wiry, he had succeeded in slipping into the police lines, ducking in and out among the waiting crowds. The fourth time, however, his wet head and certain suspicious cleanliness betrayed him, and he and Joe were unceremoniously turned away.

Jimmy and Joe were inseparable; one never enjoyed what the other lacked, the only difference being that Joe's power of expression lay in his stumpy tail, while Jimmy's bright blue eyes and honest, freckled face were assets which earned him many a meal, with a night's lodging thrown in. Joe usually managed to creep in under his master's bare heels, and thus the two had gone through many ups and downs together.

On this hot afternoon both were crestfallen. Another bath in the cool water seemed so alluring, and Joe had just cheated out of his favorite game. Jimmy would say: "Ready, Joe!" and he would dive, head foremost, from the pier, and start off swimming under water. Joe would plunge in to the rescue, and, grabbing some portion of the ragged trousers, would tow him triumphantly to shore amid the cheers of the spectators. Joe adored the excitement, and sometimes it was his only fare—poor dog!

Indeed, just now, being turned away from their one restaurant, hunger began to gnaw. Errands had been few and far between, so there were no pennies in Jimmy's pocket.

Jimmy was poor, but proud; he would not beg for himself, but he could not let Joe starve, and, comforting his stomach with the assurance that he should soon have a bone, he turned into a quiet street and scanned the promising front doors.

At length he and Joe decided to try a green one with bright brass knob and a new electric button. Jimmy looked mild and long; there is a certain fascination in pressing one's finger on an electric button.

Loud rings sounded in the hall, and an angry looking man pulled open the door.

"Git out—go 'long wid yer," he growled, but something in the blue eyes stopped him.

"What are ye doin' to that bell—what do ye want?" he asked.

"A bit of a bone fur me dog," said Jimmy; "he's starvin'—he is." He wouldn't ask a person like that for anything for himself, but Joe's need was urgent.

"Set on the stoop an' I'll see," said the man, and slamming the door, Jimmy heard his retreating footsteps, and he and Joe exchanged knowing smiles while they waited.

In a few moments the door was opened wide enough to shove through a wooden platter filled with tempting remnants of a meal.

"Be off wid yez," called the same gruff voice, and the boy and dog scampered away to a certain spot on the long wooden pier at the foot of the street, where they might enjoy their supper undisturbed.

There was a boat coming in, loaded with tired excursionists, and Jimmy and Joe idly watched the crowd, as it surged along the pier.

Suddenly their eyes were riveted upon a tot of a child, who was trying in vain to keep up with the rest of her family. Jimmy looked at the big eyes and the golden hair, and the dimpled rosy face. He adored baby girls. Joe was looking at the doll she carried in her fat arms; he loved dolls. Even as he looked, she dropped the doll—what luck! Joe made a dash for it, frightening the baby, who started to run, too, as fast as her little legs would carry her. Jimmy, hearing the pattering sound of her feet, looked up in time to see how fatally close she was to the edge of the pier. She had rescued her doll, but in doing so, lost her balance and fell into the water, with a terrified, gurgling cry.

Joe stood rooted on the brink, horrified at what he had done, but Jimmy plunged straight in, close beside the struggling baby. He held her well above the water, until ready hands came to the rescue, and they were both hauled gently up to the pier. The baby was not hurt a bit, but Jimmy felt pretty cold and tired. When at length he opened his eyes, he saw a kind, motherly face bending over him.

"Where do you live, my boy?" asked a pleasant, cheery voice; "we must get you home soon and put you to bed."

"He ain't got no home, ma'am; that kid's been a sneakin' to free baths all day—an' here he's give us the slip agin." Jimmy recognized the policeman's burly figure.

"Bless him!" said the pleasant voice. "He saved my baby, so I'll take him with me."

"And Joe, too," said Jimmy, putting out his hand to his comrade, who stood by with drooping tail.

After that there were no more hungry homeless days for Jimmy or Joe. The new friend turned out a friend indeed. The father of the baby girl took him as errand boy in his grocery store, Joe being employed as a watcher of rats and stray dogs. They both lived up stairs in peace and plenty with the family; and today one can scarcely trace in the well-cared-for, neatly-dressed boy, the ragged urchin whose last free bath saved the baby's life.

SOME QUESTIONS IN REGARD TO THE HISTORY AND GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY.

By a Special Contributor.

In an address delivered last Memorial Day, the speaker advised the younger portion of his audience to study their own country first, to become familiar with the conditions existing at the time the Union was formed; its geography at that period; its growth and present boundaries, and to do this before trying to know all about the everchanging map of Europe. In the hope his advice may be taken here are a few things curious and interesting that it may be worth the time and search to look up.

Did you know that even before the Federation of the Colonies, and long before the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, there were then in existence within the present limits of the United States, four separate republics, constitutions, governments and officials in each?

Who furnished the design for the Great Seal of the United States?

Who suggested the motto, E Pluribus Unum?

If you are somewhat familiar with the seal, its splendid eagle, olive branch, bundle of arrows, thirteen stripes, and thirteen stars, like golden lights breaking through the clouds, do you know the design of the other side, and its motto?

Can you name the seals of the several States and their mottoes?

How many of the States have their mottoes in English?

How many in Latin?

How many have no motto?

Which State has a French motto?

Which one has an Italian motto?

Which one has a Spanish motto?

Which one has a Greek motto?

Which one has an Indian motto?

And the translation of each.

Two States have the same motto; which ones are they?

Which one of our States became a part of the Union without having previously been a portion of the United States territory, was in fact a foreign government?

What portion of the United States was for over forty years, without a name, was not a part of any State or Territory, had no government, no officials, no settlements, not even a settler's cabin, not an acre of land under cultivation; greater in area than either of the States of Connecticut, Delaware, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Rhode Island or Vermont, and this state of affairs existed notwithstanding it was splendid agricultural land, well watered, considerable timber, and bounded on three sides by populous States and growing cities and villages?

Did you ever notice that stars upon our coins have six points, while those on the flag have five points?

How did this occur?

Read the interesting story of the birth of "Old Glory" and then see if you can fold a piece of paper in such a manner that by one clipping with the scissors you can make a perfect five-pointed star, like the thorough American seamstress of history.

These and other similar questions are worth all the time required to look them up, by the school children, or some older people, who would be somewhat puzzled to give the correct information if asked to do so.

It is not long ago a teacher in one of the public schools was asked which one is called the "Lone Star State," and replied: "I am not sure, but I think it is New Mexico," possibly not stopping to think that New Mexico is not a State.

And in an article in a magazine not of old date, the writer spoke of "our forty-seven States," and how we had grown since 1776. He evidently did not wish to be behind the times if Arizona and New Mexico were admitted, before his article was published.

JAMIE'S BATH.

It was Jamie's bath night. He had several each week, and he hated them all. On this particular night, once started, he soaked and splashed in the tub for a full half hour, then his mother haled him forth. He came out of the room in his pajamas with his face all streaked and dirty as it was when he went in.

"Mercy!" cried his mother, "I thought you took a bath!"

"So I did," answered Jamie scornfully, "a bully one!"

"But your face is black!" said his mother.

"Oh!" Jamie smiled understandingly, "my face is all right; I have to wash that in the morning, bath or no bath. You don't s'pose I'm going to waste time bathing my face! I always begin just below my ears and work down on my arms and legs; but I always leave my face and hands—those ends I 'tend to in the morning."

BALLOONING FOR SNAPSHOTS.

There is nothing exciting about a balloon voyage. You take your place in a shallow wicker basket; decide to take a picture of the crowd as you leave the earth; hear the order "let go," and before you can press the button, the crowd has evaporated—sunk out of sight—and the rest is a moving picture show, with no sense of motion, not the slightest feeling of danger, the air delightfully cool, and absolute silence. Presently a voice, apparently from another balloon a long way off, asks how you like the journey. You have exactly the same trouble with your hearing you had while in the caisson, but from an opposite cause—there pressure, here rarefaction. In this case, too, the act of swallowing brings relief. A balloon trip is for all the world like sitting in a dentist's chair and taking a whiff of gas, followed by a pleasant dream. But of course, instead of taking gas, gas is taking you. Photography under these conditions is a very simple matter—pointing the lens over the edge of the basket, waiting until the desired object comes into view, and the snapshot is taken.—[W. N. Jennings, in Booklovers Magazine.

Being lonesome today, I thought I would be neighborly and make a fraternal call.'"—[Unidentified.

A RETURN TO NATURE.

How Some Women Are Finding Both Health and Profit Therein.

By a Special Contributor.

WHEN the lords and ladies of the French court got tired of making love to other people's wives and husbands, they repaired to the back yard of the Trianon and took to making butter.

In this year of our Lord nineteen hundred and three the gay court of Louis is a thing of the past; but these time-honored customs still prevail. Men still make love to other men's wives, and some people, by the grace of God, still make butter. Jean Jacques Rousseau has become a memory, but his doctrine of "return to a state of nature" is preached today by the head of our American state, and by him nobly exemplified in the matter of wood-chopping and children.

In the lesser ranks of American life, some of its most pressing problems are being solved by application of the same solution. Not all chop wood or make butter, though many still raise babies; but a reaction is surely setting in away from the overcrowded lines of professional life and in the direction of a partial return to nature.

Certainly one of California's problems is, "What shall we do with our college-bred women?"

They cannot all be doctors, and few can be lawyers. They may not all have a taste for trained nursing, and they have ceased to be satisfied with a mere round of social pleasures even if this path is not closed to them by financial considerations. Last and most important, they cannot all marry. This is not because college women have learned to scorn the married state; far from it. They believe in marriage thoroughly, almost to a woman; but they have learned to regard it as an object in itself, not as an alternative. Confident in their own power, stimulated by sane ideals, they look for a man who may be writ in large type, and failing such a one, they prefer a life of lonely independence to one of mismated companionship. Perhaps they ask too much; perhaps the men they would reckon with do not realize how much such women have to give. Certain it is that many do not marry; and these even where they do not feel the pressure of financial necessity, must have an outlet for their trained energies, bent to such continued activity through four essentially formative years

To these the schoolroom is always open and many find temporary shelter therein. But if they be of the right stuff through and through, it is inevitable that they chafe in the narrowing treadmill path; and sooner or later, like the immortal Monk of Siberia, they are dangerously apt to "break from their cell" and elope with the nearest available opportunity, matrimonial or otherwise.

Apprehending this, some take to charity or to settlement work, some to Journalism or what not; and some with a truer insight, copy the ladies of the French court and turn to Nature. Not that they merely dabble prettily in household arts as did the ladies of the Trianon. But they work honestly and heartily with their hands at wholesome outdoor occupations considered for many years beneath the plane of people of culture; and they find in the simple, active, outdoor life the rewards that Nature never denies to those that seek her sincerely. Good health, sound nerves, strong muscles, and clear brains; these are the lures that tempt modern women of culture away from the nerve-destroying, wearisome strain of professional or semi-professional life; and in the new field they prove beyond a doubt that a college education is never wasted; for they distance their competitors in those occupations that call for the hand and the head as well as in those that call for a trained mind only.

Miss K. O. Sessions, graduate of the University of California, and later English teacher in the San Diego High School, some years ago, by preference, left school teaching and took to raising flowers, with such success that she now indisputably leads in that line in the city of Bay and Climate.

Miss Sessions's large gardens on upper Fifth street are among the sights of the city; and her florist shop in the heart of the town is one of the most restful and charming spots for the downtown shopper. An artistic eye and hand are evidenced in every detail of the room and in the arrangement of the large window. Bamboo and Japanese matting, Indian baskets and wicker jars are the prevailing features of the scheme, against which restful background the beautiful flowers give eloquent evidence of their own fresh-hued loveliness. Low-voiced young girls in trim costumes wait quickly and deftly on the customers. Absolute courtesy, unfailing promptness in filling orders, and a sympathetic interest in your tastes and needs make up the characteristic attitude of Miss Sessions and her staff; and when you live in San Diego you buy flowers galore to the undoing of your pocketbook, because they tempt so beguilingly in their graceful setting, and the buying of them is made such an act of pleasant courtesy.

But the college woman, when she goes back to nature, does not lay aside the intellectual interests that her training has given her. Miss Sessions spends her days with her flowers, tending them often with her own hands, even now; but she keeps in touch with the live thought of the day. She is a member of a little circle of college-bred people who meet bi-weekly to sharpen their wits on each other; and you find no falling off in her mental alertness because she has chosen a work of the hand rather than the head.

In that part of California which is neither of the north nor yet of the south, another cultured young woman has turned to practical chicken-raising as a means of livelihood. She is not college-bred, in fact, but she bears all the marks of the college woman. She can quote you Browning or Tennyson by the yard, or turn off a very passable verse on a sunset herself by way of variety; her library table is strewn with the leading magazines; and she is better versed in modern fiction than the next nine out of ten.

With all this she takes a genuine delight in her broods of fluffy chicks, which she raises and tends with her own hands from the time when they first break the shell till they are safely disposed on their way to market.

Like Miss Sessions, this unconscious disciple of Jean Jacques combines art and intelligence in her practical work. The large yards in which her feathery folk disport themselves are adorned with trees selected for utility and beauty; spreading mulberry trees give a grateful shade, and in the springtime furnish a crop of berries most healthful for the growing chicks; locusts add shelter and beauty; and a corner of alfalfa and a crop of sturdy yellow sunflowers supply food for the busy inmates and a pleasing variety to the eye.

This very business-like young woman is even accused by her friends of carrying out her love of the artistic in the selection of her flock, the two bands absolutely uniform, one of speckled Plymouth Rocks, the other of shining, red-tipped Black Minorcas, giving color to this aspersion. She stoutly denies such a sentimental weakness, however, professing herself influenced solely by practical motives, as she considers the Plymouth Rock the most desirable fowl for the market, and the Black Minorca most valuable as an egg-producer.

Certainly she understands her business from A to Z, and finds it both profitable and pleasant. As for the ease and skill with which she administers it, see her of an afternoon attired in her wide sombrero and trim duck suit, feed bucket in hand and closely surrounded by her feathered flock, and you'll be convinced she has solved the problem of doing hard work easily and gracefuly.

These are examples only, but they show which way the wind sets, and more might be easily adduced. There is the college professor's daughter, herself college-bred, who is considering violet culture as a permanent employment, induced by the thought of the wholesome outdoor life it will bring her, and I could name half a dozen more on the instant who are turning their thoughts in the same direction.

Or, leaving women aside, when we add that Mr. Jevenau, son of the wealthiest silk manufacturer in the world, spends his idle hours in his Santa Barbara home happily raising chickens, it may be further evidence that Nature is again calling her children, as she did in France in the days before the deluge.

WORKING IN THE FRUIT.

Financial and Other Returns of Various Employments Performed by Women.

By a Special Contributor.

Does working in the fruit pay women?

This question is so frequently asked, not alone by residents of the larger cities of California, who wish to go out into the orchard towns on a "paying vacation," but by many from eastern States, who are coming here for their health or for other reasons, that a satisfactory answer would no doubt be acceptable.

There are various kinds of work, picking, packing, cutting, peeling, stemming, hulling and canning. The cutting, stemming and peeling are carried on in connection with the canneries, and cutting, packing and hulling almonds and walnuts are done independently by the driers.

Fruit picking is very hard work, never undertaken by women, and is paid usually at the rate of $1.25 to $1.50 per day. This does not include berry picking, in which women join, and which comes under the head of piece work.

Canning is done by girls, and pays $1 a day in most canneries, but it is undesirable work, as canners must sit on high benches, with their hands continually in the water. Many complain of having caught rheumatism from their work.

Nearly everything else in the fruit is piece work, and varies in amount and price with the crop. It begins in June with stemming cherries; in July apricots are cut, then, after a couple of weeks' lay off, peaches, pears and nectarines are cut, and almonds and walnuts are hulled. Pears are quite hard to handle, and in some districts are relegated to the Indians and Mexicans. Cutting consists of splitting the fruit through the middle and taking out the pit. The fruit is then spread on large trays, that are removed by men, when full, and placed in the sun to dry. Boxes containing thirty-five to fifty pounds are paid for at about these rates: apricots, 6 cents; peaches, 3 cents; cherries, 5 cents; nectarines, 6 cents; hulling almonds, 2 cents a pound.

The papers sometimes advertise for cutters, and promise as high as 12½ cents a box for apricots; other fruit in proportion. These prices are paid in out-of-the way places, where cutters are harder than usual to obtain, or in the mountains, where the excellent pay is counterbalanced by the greater expense of living.

Beginners cannot do more than eight or nine boxes a day, as a rule, and twenty boxes a day is above the average, though, after two or three years' experience, some girls have cut thirty-five forty-pound boxes in a day.

In this work, as in all others, quickness of the fingers counts, and those who are accustomed to continual exercise of the shoulder muscles succeed best, not tiring as soon as others. For three or four days a great stiffness in the shoulders is experienced, but this wears off, and unless it is necessary to work overtime, as is often the case, no other uneasiness is felt.

Packing is the pleasantest work, but packing-houses usually desire experienced hands. It does not take long to gain experience, however, and experts make as much as $2 a day. Apricots and grapes are packed, but the greater amount of work in that line is during the winter with lemons and oranges.

In every case the fruit season in one locality is short, and varies with the amount raised, the altitude, or other location. The greatest trouble about all this work is that it is not steady, the forces being frequently laid off and unable to earn anything. There is, however, a great demand for workers in season, and any woman who wants it can find more work than she can do.

If a woman considers "paying" as permanently covering her living expenses, board and room rent, the work in the fruit does not pay, as any one can see. If, however, she lives at home, and is at no expense for board, she may make quite a neat sum—perhaps enough to clothe herself—in a season, by working all day while the fruit lasts in one place alone.

There are, notwithstanding the above, several advantages to working in the fruit that are not financial, and of these the chief is the pleasure of a vacation passed in a certain way, and another is the companionship. All manner of people—teachers, ministers, housewives, boys and girls—spend part of their summer in the canneries, or the driers, and there is plenty of work and fun along with the work. In fact, if you live in a small fruit center, you are likely to be lonesome during the season if you are not "in the fruit," as everybody else is there.

The canneries are closed buildings, but the driers are open on all sides, and you cannot sit a day, breathing California country air, without gaining in health. Physicians recommend the work highly for invalids, and these always improve, if they do not work too long at a time and tire themselves out.

Work in the oranges and lemons is not so healthful, for a large amount of moisture is necessary to mature these fruits grow, and in consequence their locals have considerable dampness.

An enjoyable and inexpensive vacation may be spent by going from one fruit center to another, as each fruit gives out, with a horse and wagon, living in the wagon or in a tent. This adds the luxury of travel to the healthfulness of camping, and when three or four club together, the earnings will more than cover expenses, camping ground being free. Many boys do this and come home at the end of the vacation with money enough for their winter school books.

While the financial gain is, as has been shown, greater than for any manual labor, no woman who has gone into the work will deny that she has added immaterially to her stock of health, and has enjoyed herself in doing it.

EDNA ST. JOHN.

JUST LIKE A GIRL.

An Excursion and a Horse Who Answers to the Name of Jim.

Two girls once went on a driving trip with a pleasant livery horse named Jim. The third day they stopped for lunch and to rest the horse at a stable of which was crowded with the horses of country people who had driven in to a fair that was being on in the village. These various animals, a good what intoxicated stable boy managed to mix up, when asked to harness Jim again, he had to admit that he was uncertain as to which horse belonged to the young ladies. "Why, of course," they cried, "you know Jim anywhere; a brown horse with a white nose." Taken to the stable, they found themselves confronted with innumerable brown horses, all of whose noses were white. "Horses look terribly alike with their harness off," confessed the girls, "but," brightening, "our horse knows his name. Jim! Jim!" At the sound, one of the brown beasts stretched out his neck and neighed intelligently. "That's he," cried the girls; "good old Jim knows us, even if we don't know him. Besides now we look at him closely, we recognize his expression." "Well," said the proprietor, "if you're sure it's your horse——"

The girls drove off and finished their tour successfully, though once or twice Jim gave evidence of mannerisms that they had not remarked before. "And how did Jim suit you?" asked the livery-stable keeper, to whom they had hired their rig, when they finally got back into his yard. "Nice horse, Jim, best I have in the stable. But in the name of mercy," in a voice of consternation, "what's that you have between the shafts?" "Why, isn't that Jim?" faltered the girls. "Jim," cried the livery-keeper, furiously; "that broken-down horse Jim? Not by a jugful it isn't. And so it proved, to the detriment of the girls' purses. For Jim was never discovered.—[Everybody's Magazine.

THE KAISER'S MODESTY.

At dinner one night when the Emperor was sitting with Lord Lonsdale, a guest talking to another at the table quoted a little-known passage from Shakespeare, and, that there should be no mistake as to its source, ended with the words, "as the divine William said." There happened to be a lull in the conversation at the time, and the remark was audible to every one, the Emperor included. Turning to his host, the Emperor said, with a puzzled expression: "Curious! I do not remember that my sainted grandfather ever said that!"—[M. A. P.

The Bulgar Peasant

His Appearance, His Habits and His Weakness.

From the London Post.

AT a time when the desirability and practicability of getting a people "back to the land," and those who are there on it, is exercising the home politicians, the peasant folk of Bulgaria—sons of the soil, and thinking in parishes, supply interesting study. Their capital city, if you take away ministerial offices, and its diplomatic colony, is a village, and the peasant is quite as much at home as in his own straw yard. It is as a man that he wears, in the streets, in the Parliament, the Cathedral, or wherever his business may call him, the costume of the country, the same in which he tills fields and herds his cattle. There are, of course, degrees of comparison in the garments, according to influence or inclination of the wearers, but the main features are a short, round jacket, usually black, white shirt, worked with red and indigo embroidery, and coarse white nether garments, gartered in with rudinous tapes over the legs, and fitting elsewhere as diligently as the hide of the Indian rhinoceros. Days when any festival or council of rural notables is being held in the town, you may see strings of quaint pointed vehicles bumping along the converging roads, four horses are driven abreast, the two outside obviously misfits, as far as the harness is concerned, one of the team possibly lame—but still four in hand. The vehicle itself is a species of phaeton, which has seen better years—a great many better years, judging by appearance—and seated therein in solitary state is one person of local importance, a mayor, or headman of some distant village, whose self-appreciation does not ebb away as he jolts into the streets of the metropolis.

Lack of the Business Instinct.

As a tradesman dealing in the shop wares of a town Bulgar is not at his best. The simple cunning and unconquerable suspicion of the peasant is ill-suited to the disposal of goods which are bought wholesale at a market price—a market which is hundreds of miles away, and cannot be influenced by the heavy influences sacred to the village huckster—and which are sold in conformity with the charges current in many shops. The customer in quest of a bottle of china cup will find the vendor of these things drinking watery tea and holding interminable discourse with a group of neighbors, and his presence will be at first regarded rather as an unwelcome interruption to conversation than as a hopeful occasion for effort. If the object of purchase is not in immediate use, the shopman has a tendency to take refuge in the familiar "Nyema," which seems ever at the tip of his tongue, and to turn back to his tea and small talk with the least possible delay. This inaptitude for the handling of shop wares is somewhat characteristic of Eastern races, and it accounted in some measure for the domination of Russian trade in the days of Cherkovo, and for the ineradicable foothold of the Jewish element in later times, for the absence of a middle class in Poland, and for the long survival of the Turkish element in Bohemia. In Bulgaria and Servia at the present day it has opened the door to a considerable flooding of Austrian trade control.

The Love of Haggling.

One exception, however, must be made for dealings in stock as comes naturally within the scope of pastoral life and barter, where prices and conditions are liable to variation, and where there is a blessed opportunity of haggling. The seller of fruit and vegetables, cheese and chickens, is on surer ground, and his position is more congenial to his understanding than is the case with the hardware dealer. There is, perhaps, a lot of cherries to be disposed of hastily, or a basket must be induced to renew her youth like the eggs in the eyes of an unwary customer, and there is much time for conversation. While the regular trades are dull and dingy affairs, the market stalls and greengrocers' booths are centers of bustle, and even then do not exhaust the activities of the traffic in commodities. The edge of a sidewalk in a busy street is the resting place for the outdoor trader, who squats down beside his tray of eggs, walnuts and sunflowers, filling his time by whistling a bubbling reed tune on his pipes, and stopping now and again to replace a nut which has crawled adventurously away from the rest. At the moment of writing the maize is scarce ripe in the cornfields around Sofia, but boiled heads of it, presumably from the earlier harvest in southern Bulgaria, are already being hawked round the streets as an article of light refreshment. Beyond the town, in his more particular domain of fields and flocks, the peasant appears as a cheerful, canny, quarrelsome individual, a primitive son of the village, with less of human responsiveness than one expects in an average fox terrier. He will let his dogs bite and snap round your horse's heels with absolute unconcern for your possible discomfort at their performances, and if you transfer your chiding from their heads to a sense of possible personal unpleasantness in store for him into a perfunctory attempt at calling them off. If you killed a dog, a bitter sense of injustice and upbraiding toward his property would probably rouse no discreet fury, for the sin against the person of man is a cardinal offense in his eyes.

The Bulgar Peasant.

His Appearance, His Habits and His Weakness.

From the London Post.

At a time when the desirability and problem of getting a people "back to the land," and keeping those who are there on it, is exercising the minds of home politicians, the peasant folk of Bulgaria, tenacious of the soil, and thinking in parishes, supply an interesting study. Their capital city, if you take away its ministerial offices, and its diplomatic colony, is a large village, and the peasant is quite as much at home there as in his own straw yard. It is as a matter of course that he wears, in the streets, in the Parliament, in the Cathedral, or wherever his business may call him, the costume of the country, the same in which he tills his fields and herds his cattle. There are, of course, degrees of comparison in the garments, according to the affluence or inclination of the wearers, but the prevailing features are a short, round jacket, usually black, over a white shirt, worked with red and indigo embroidery, and coarse white nether garments, gartered in with multicolored tapes over the legs, and fitting elsewhere as negligently as the hide of the Indian rhinoceros. On days when any festival or council of rural notables is being held in the town, you may see strings of quaintly decorated vehicles bumping along the converging roads. Four horses are driven abreast, the two outside ones obviously misfits, as far as the harness is concerned, and one of the team possibly lame—but still four horses. The vehicle itself is a species of phaeton, which has seen better years—a great many better years, judging from its appearance—and seated therein in solitary state is some person of local importance, a mayor, or headman from some distant village, whose self-appreciation does not ebb away as he jolts into the streets of the metropolis.

Lack of the Business Instinct.

As a tradesman dealing in the shop wares of a town, the Bulgar is not at his best. The simple cunning and unconquerable suspicion of the peasant is ill-suited for the disposal of goods which are bought wholesale at a market price—a market which is hundreds of miles away, and cannot be influenced by the heavy infantile cunning sacred to the village huckster—and which must be sold in conformity with the charges current in neighboring shops. The customer in quest of a bottle of ink or a china cup will find the vendor of these things drinking watery tea and holding interminable discourse with a group of neighbors, and his presence will be slowly realized rather as an unwelcome interruption to the conversation than as a hopeful occasion for effecting a sale. If the object of purchase is not in immediate evidence, the shopman has a tendency to take refuge in the familiar "Nyema," which seems ever at the tip of his tongue, and to turn back to his tea and small talk with the last possible delay. This inaptitude for the display of shop wares is somewhat characteristic of the Turkish race, and it accounted in some measure for the long domination of Russian trade in the days of Great Bulgaria, and for the ineradicable foothold of the Jewish element in later times, for the absence of a middle class in Poland, and for the long survival of the German element in Bohemia. In Bulgaria and Servia of the present day it has opened the door to a considerable monopoly of Austrian trade control.

The Law of Haggling.

An exception, however, must be made for dealings in such stuff as comes naturally within the scope of peasant barter, where prices and conditions are open to variation, and where there is a blessed opportunity of haggling. The seller of fruit and vegetables, eggs and chickens, is on surer ground, and his method is more congenial to his understanding than to cope with the hardware dealer. There is, perhaps, a load of cherries to be disposed of hastily, or a hen that must be induced to renew her youth like the eagle at the eye of an unwary customer, and there is much room for conversation. While the regular trade goes on dull and dingy affairs, the market stalls and peasants' booths are centers of bustle, and even these do not exhaust the activities of the traffic in country towns. The edge of a sidewalk in a busy street is a favorite resting place for the outdoor trader, who will set down beside his tray of eggs, walnuts and snails, killing his time by whistling a bubbling reed tune on his pipe, and stopping now and again to replace a snail which has crawled adventurously away from its fellows. At the moment of writing the maize is scarcely ripe in the cornfields around Sofia, but boiled heads of it, presumably from the earlier harvest in southern districts, are already being hawked round the streets as a delicate of light refreshment. Beyond the town proper, in his more particular domain of fields and by the roadside, the peasant appears as a cheerful, canny, quite companionable individual, a primitive son of the village, with less of human responsiveness than one expects in the average fox terrier. He will let his dogs bay and wind round your horse's heels with absolute unconcern for your possible discomfort at their performance, and if you transfer your chiding from their heads to the cause of possible personal unpleasantness in store for him into a perfunctory attempt at calling them off. If you killed a dog, a bitter sense of injustice and grievance toward his property would probably rouse in him a discreet fury, for the sin against the personal property is a cardinal offense in his eyes.

Love of Animals.

The Bulgar has not the love of animals and children which exists among his Turkish neighbors, and many other peoples. Of the beasts of the byre he sets the highest store on the placid, powerful buffalo, whose presence make it a valuable factor on the farm lands, and "the love of the buffalo" takes the place in his estimation of "my lord the elephant" with the Indian cultivator. Being a beast of the wet lands and marsh, the buffalo has certain imperative requirements with regard to his health and serviceability. In summer during the hot dry weather nearly every buffalo cart is furnished with a long pole, at the end of which a tin can is fastened, and when a convenient ditch is met with, too small to permit of wallowing, the can comes into play as a ladle, wherewith the mud and water are scooped up and drenched over the hide of the appreciative beasts. The crowning mercy of the buffalo's working day, however, comes when he is unyoked and driven to some neighboring pool for his evening bath. With one rolling splash he sinks into its muddy depths, freed in an instant from a persecuting swarm of flies, and lies by the half-hour with nothing above the surface but ears, nostrils and wild staring eyes, possessed, no doubt, with a huge contentment, and having the appearance of a submerged fiend.

THE COSY CORNER.

Its Probable Origin and How to Make It Quaint and Artistic.

By a Special Contributor.

It's the man, and not the woman, that is the real cosy-corner or den fiend. Man's instinct for a cosy corner dates back to his semi-barbarian days, and perhaps to the ape and gorilla epoch. We know of animals that love their dens and exclusive places of retreat, and why not man, the higher animal? I believe the cosy corner originated on the emerging of man from the animal state of existence, his love for the cosy corner is manifested by his willingness to go shopping with his wife when the consideration of a cosy corner or den is on. Oftentimes he is so overjoyed in his prospective den realization that he will not even ask the price of the material used, and will expend from $100 to $200 or more in its construction. So selfish is he in this respect that he will overlook the fact that there are also other rooms in the house to be furnished, but finally informs his wife of the necessity of economy in furnishing the "balance" of the house, and cuts her parlor lace curtain bill down to $1.38 per pair.

A COSY CORNER.

Cosy corners are usually built in the darkest corner in the room or under the stair casing. Why not get out of the gloomy old rut, and reverse the custom by admitting light into them? This is easily done by placing them in front of a window, as shown in the design. One can be made very quaint and artistic by pasting a piece of vermillion-red Chinese paper over the glass, and then having a green leather grill decorated with small gilded balls made to fit close in against it, and overdrape with a pair of ruffled muslin curtains, dotted in red, yellow, or green. This will produce a luxurious effect at little cost. The rest of the design sufficiently shows the method of treatment.

Whereupon the broker rushed out of his office angrily shaking his fist in their faces, shouted:

FIELD NOTES.

J. W. Jeffrey, Agricultural Editor.

Are You Out for St. Louis?

COMMISSIONER FRANK WIGGINS thinks California has been very slow in getting started in the preparation of the soil products of the State for the St. Louis Exposition. To the ordinary observer it would seem that things were rushing for this great show, but Mr. Wiggins is not satisfied with the progress, and he knows. While much will be expected when the gates are thrown open to the public next spring, California will be handicapped by previous achievements, and unless the commissioners are supported royally there will be disappointment where we cannot afford to endure it. As to whether it will pay there is but one answer to the proposal to outdo every other effort and all other exhibits. Progress in California from a commercial standpoint is not measured by the rule of other States. We have won millions of invesiment by advertising in the right way, from people who do not depend upon the soil for the fortunes they spend in beautifying it. Mr. Wiggins has the way. Support him.

Hybrid Walnuts.

A PROGRESSIVE walnut grower of Los Angeles county now has a number of trees of the best soft-shell variety growing upon black walnut stock. The nuts are exceedingly smooth, large and fine. He says they have the flavor of the parent stock, and he is now planting the nuts expecting to secure a finer, more delicious product than the nuts growing upon the black walnut stock. Of this the grower cannot be sure till he demonstrates it upon his supposedly hybrid seedlings. The black walnut roots have produced enormous tops, so large and rank that the shoots have to be tied to the main stem until they harden and become self-supporting. This test is expected to show whether a non-resistant kind can be produced by budding the soft-shell to hardier stock—a desirable consummation if the walnut bacteriosis is to continue its ravages in the terrible proportions experienced this season.

Effect of Insecticides.

AS over 500 colonies of scutellista have been liberated in Los Angeles county within the last twenty days, the effect of fumigating or spraying is an important item. One experiment shows that spraying does not injure this black scale parasite, the fly multiplying, it is said, without interruption. If the spray will not kill a tender fly it will do little injury to a tough scale. Had fumigation been applied, the account states, the flies would all have been killed. But the problem of protecting the scutellista is paramount, and te advice is freely given to place the fly where it need not be disturbed. This can be done by setting aside a few trees in every orchard for feeding ground for the flies, or they may be placed upon pepper trees or shrubbery about the house, from which they may spread to the orchards after the effects of the insecticides have disappeared.

Controlling Vine Disease.

IN the year 1884 a terrible malady began its ravages upon the vineyards of Southern California. The disease made its appearance upon the vines at Anaheim, and spread rapidly upon the stock of almost every locality in this end of the State. It paralyzed the grape-growing industry, ruined the growers, and for years continued its work till some natural cause relieved the vines of the trouble and placed the vineyardist upon an apparently safe basis again. Our vineyards are comparatively free from maladies of this character, and may remain so indefinitely. In another item, I present the results of experience with stock grafting from proof slips sent out by Prof. Newton B. Pierce of Santa Ana, Government Pathologist in charge of the Pacific Coast Laboratory and Plant Improvement Gardens. In view of the great advancement of the vine industry in Southern California during the last three or four years, Prof. Pierce's experiments will interest a large number of ranchers in this section.

Forests Increasing.

OUR statements upon the improvement of the forests in the San Gabriel and San Bernardino ranges leads a correspondent to remark that the forests of Germany, under direct care of the government, are producing timber faster than the nation is consuming it. Yes, there is no doubt of this, for the statement is supported by most reliable statistics, and was the boast of the delegation of German farmers recently touring this Coast. But the consumption of forests for lumber in the old countries where progress in building is measureable cannot be made a criterion for this marvelous nation. However well our timber supply may be preserved, nothing short of a continued panic would reduce the use of lumber below the natural growth of the forests. As forestry and irrigation go hand in hand, the development of the arid West will have a tendency to increase practical interest in the questions bearing upon forestry.

One reason the European nations have given so much attention to this branch of agriculture is that extensive observations of the rainfall have shown that at least one-fourth of the area of a country must be given to timber growing to maintain the humidity at a point where crops may be grown with success, California has not been altogether idle in forest preservation. Forest maps of the entire State have been made; botanical and popular account of all native trees published; lumbering has been systematically examined; methods of milling and value of timber ascertained; results of torrent action and forest fires studied; valuable trees introduced from foreign countries; much improvement made in handling forest fires, and prosecutions carried out against those who set fires or cut timber upon the public lands. However, scientific forest handling as understood in some of the older countries is unknown in this great country of the United States.

Slaughter of Birds.

TWO lads of the city recently brought in the maximum of doves, 50 each, and stated that they would return next day to continue the slaughter. No doubt they did. The degree of sport afforded in dove shooting may be determined by this incident, for boys are not usually very steady of aim or able to call difficult wing shots. They, perhaps, did a lot of pot shooting, with no desire but to kill. The farmers have contended that dove shooting is not really sport, and in many cases are obliged to patrol their premises, especially on their rest days, to protect their fruit as well as their birds. In these days, when interest in the protection of birds is assuming national importance, the farm should be allowed influence in determining what species should be protected, and youthful sports be relegated to grasshopper shooting, or something more in keeping with their sporting capabilities than even tame turtle doves. The conviction is gaining rapidly that the spread of many insect pests is due to the absence of birds, and shooting should be materially limited till that question is fully settled. Boys usually bag everything with feathers when there are plenty of squirrels whose slaughter requires some degree of skill and being a great good to the farmer under all circumstances.

Ginseng Growing.

I HAVE a letter, just received from a Times reader, asking the mooted question, "Will ginseng culture pay in California?" No one has sufficiently tested it in this State as far as my reading indicates, to answer positively. The agricultural editor of the San Francisco Chronicle, who is awake on all farm subjects, intimates that the cultivation of ginseng cannot be made profitable in this portion of the Coast. He says the roots could not be produced here for less than $25 a pound. An Eastern writer speaks very discouragingly of this infant industry in a country where the plant is native, moisture and suitable soil available in abundance. Seven years are required to produce the roots from the seed, the latter requiring two seasons to germinate. It is said speculators are offering one cent each for ginsing seed. At this price they must depend upon the golden promise of the advertisement to get their money back from their dupes, which they usually succeed in doing, with usury.

Ginseng growing requires conditions similar to those found in its native wood. Every one knows we have no such conditions here, and it would be expensive and generally disappointing to try to supply them by artificial means. While encouraging diversity of crops in every possible manner in California The Times, with its present information, draws the line at ginseng and advises its readers to let the other fellow experiment with all such problematic crops.

The Walnut Crop.

IN an interview with J. B. Neff of Anaheim, the enormous loss to the growers from the walnut bacteriosis or blight was the leading feature of his statements. In some localities the loss is placed at 75 per cent. of the nuts formed and started growing at the beginning of the season, and many orchards will have no more than one-third of a normal crop. The disease is so virulent this year that grave fears are expressed for the safety of future crops. I have secured samples of full-grown nuts from trees exempt from the disease earlier in the season. The nuts were totally ruined on this tree from attacks coming in July. A Fullerton grower tells me that the farmers of a certain locality have wiped the malady out of existence by passing a resolution that there is no such disease as walnut blight known to them. This is an easy way of disposing of a blight that has damaged a great industry so materially as late as 1903.

Peter Stuyvesant tried to stay the encroachment of the New England settlers upon New Amsterdam by reading proclamations in Dutch from the border hills. Afterward his people planted a zone of onions at Weathersfield, which was more effective than the proclamations. The walnut growers must recognize that they have a serious, well-defined disease to contend against, and prepare to spray next spring in time to destroy every germ that can be reached. Mr. Neff says he will spray twice next season. With more favorable conditions—weather less propitious for bacterial growth, the growers may expect a better state of affairs in the future if they use all means at command to kill the infection. At present the only remedy offering relief is the Bordeaux mixture. Try it, by all means, and do not rest in vain belief that the crops are ruined by the sting of insects, by soil conditions, or anything else than a vegetable bacteria that may be controlled to some extent by the use of fungicides.

Asparagus Culture.

AN acquaintance who is engaged in vegetable culture asks The Times to advise him as to the prospects of making asparagus growing a success since the introduction of the fatal asparagus rust into the State. It is a difficult question to answer, but a few facts may lead to a safe conclusion, where mere prediction would be worthless. The asparagus rust (Puccinia asparagi) appeared upon the Atlantic Coast seven years ago. Prior to the importation of this disease at that time no virulent rust was known in this country, and for a few years its ravages in Massachusetts, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and a dozen other States in the extreme East bid fair to destroy the industry. After a few years, however, the disease became far less serious. The latest reports I have show that asparagus growing is being continued successfully, with only one new incubus to make profits less secure. The growers in the East have found that, like most other scourges, it has periods of cessation. They have found a reasonably sure remedy, also, and between partial exemption from natural causes, and the use of the ordinary Bordeaux mixture, the business is going on as usual.

It is one of the diseases that cannot be stamped out where it has once secured a hold The distribution of this rust is perhaps as wide as the area of cultivation, and while large local territories have not yet been invaded, the spread has reached every State in the Union. It is increasing in Massachusetts, Maryland, Texas, California, Iowa and Indiana. In New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Wisconsin, Illinois and Nebraska the trouble is becoming much less virulent, in some States having almost ceased to exist. From these facts and experience with the fungus in Los Angeles county, I believe asparagus culture should be encouraged, especially since the control of the disease has been so thoroughly demonstrated in Delaware and New Jersey. It seems to be the fate of California to receive some dreadful pest just as a horticultural industry is getting established. Only a few years ago began the cultivation of the asparagus as a commercial commodity. The orange, the walnut, the grape, the apple, pear and olive were attacked in the infancy of their production by scale, or bacterial disease. But we must remember the fate of the white and yellow scale, and now the apparent doom of the black scale through parasitic attacks. The Anaheim grape disease is no longer dreaded. The San José scale is apparently conquered by an insect enemy, and many other pests have been exterminated for all time. Perhaps the asparagus rust will disappear more readily than any of the Improvement Incorporation.

TWO weeks ago I noted the fact that the Highland Park Improvement Association had under consideration the formation of a joint stock company through which a regular revenue could be secured for the improvement of the place along lines not reached by municipal action. On last Tuesday evening at a mass meeting filling the assembly room of Occidental College, the citizens took final action that has provided a fund of about $2500 in cash, which is to be used in planting the streets uniformly to shade trees, in caring for them properly for a term of years, and in making other improvements that may be necessary. This fund is just a starter for what the board of directors expects will be provided, as the work progresses. So far as I am aware this is the only organization of this character in existence, and the experiment will be watched with great interest by those interested in suburban improvement.

The incorporation papers provide for a corporation running for fifty years. The capital stock is $20,000, divided into 2000 shares of $10 each. The stock is not assessable, the contract providing for the payment upon the stock to par value as the directors need the money. One clause in the charter prohibits the board of directors from contracting debts in the name of the organization, limiting it to the expenditure of the cash on hand. No proxies are allowed at the stockholders' meetings, and several other features have been introduced not usually found in mutual corporations. A board of eleven directors has been chosen, which shall have charge of all the business, subject only to the mandates of the stockholders' meeting. They will select the varieties of shade trees to be planted, purchase, plant and care for the trees, secure public improvements, look after the hygienic conditions of the place, and have supervision over all matters that may be for the public good in the judgment of the citizens. The idea has taken deep hold upon the people, and if the trial fails it will not be for lack of public interest.

The basis upon which the company is capitalized is that it would require $10 to plant the front of each lot, care for it for a term of five years, and do all the things necessary for the adornment and protection of the community. There are 2000 lots in Highland Park on a 50-foot basis. As two to four trees will be required for each lot, according to variety, and the trees bought in wholesale quantities, this fund should do much toward providing uniformity of shade throughout the entire district. The plan is simple, yet every legal point has been covered in the charter, making a responsible organization and a fund that can be depended upon as needed for the advancement of Highland Park.

California Vine Disease.

NEWTON B. PIERCE reports as follows upon the latest developments in the control of the Anaheim disease:

"The United States Department of Agriculture has far succeeded in its experiments for the control of the California vine disease that it is thought desirable to place the facts before the public at an earlier date than would be practicable through official channels. The experiments with grafting stocks have been in progress in the center of a badly infected district for over three years. These experiments have included the grafting of some four hundred acres of vines, the enterprise conducted by the leading viticulturists of the facts learned are in effect as follows:

"(1.) The Lenoir vine, when growing on its own roots, is practically resistant to the nematode, having been known to thrive and bear heavily for years in the midst of thousands of acres of dying vineyards.

"(2.) The Lenoir vine as a top graft has been found to save tender Muscat roots for several years. Muscats upon their own roots had been killed by the disease throughout the surrounding region.

"(3.) The Lenoir as a root upon which to graft varieties of grapes very subject to this disease, and which are fully exposed to its action, has saved thousands of such tender tops in a vigorous and productive condition for nearly or quite five years, or to the present date, in the midst of dying vineyards, and on many acres of younger vines on the same root-stock are perfectly thrifty and normal under like conditions.

"(4.) New varieties of grapes which have the Lenoir blood through hybridizing have shown resistance to the same disease.

"In addition to the above facts, it may be said that the writer sees no reason to doubt the ability of the vine disease in the Santa Clara Valley will overcome the California vine disease. These views are given as to the advantages that may arise through a knowledge of the hardiness of the Lenoir vine may be readily known to the growers of that viticultural district. The root-louse phylloxera also exists in many regions and should always be taken under consideration."

The Profits of Mohair.

I DESIRE to commend to breeders of Angora goats, in which short fiber and kemp too often appear, to secure the best bucks possible, for by this means will add 50 per cent. each year to the profit of their products. In buying mohair there are three points the manufacturer takes into consideration—length of staple, freeness from kemp, and freedom from grease. The breeder who will take the time and money to produce mohair having these desirable qualities may depend upon always finding a ready market for his product as well as the best prices then prevailing. But the breeder lacking in these qualities will meet with sorrowful disappointment, for the manufacturer is always willing to pay cash for mohair at its full value, and the breeder who receives a low figure for his clip should have no bad feeling toward the buyer, but should blame himself only for not having produced an article suitable for the production of fine goods.—[American Sheep Breeder.

Wheat for Hogs.

THE experiments made at the Washington Agricultural Station confirm those made elsewhere in showing that a bushel of wheat under favorable circumstances will make twelve pounds of gain in weight in a fattening swine of suitable age. Under ordinary circumstances in the Pacific Northwest a bushel of wheat will usually pay for twelve pounds of live hog. The actual cost of hog raising in this region must be made by charging a large part of the growth of the hog upon some food other than wheat. This is done by the use of alfalfa, rape, peas harvested by the hogs, alfalfa, artichokes, etc. The choice of these articles must depend upon circumstances. Common pumpkins also have value in this connection. Skim milk, of course, is a big factor where it can be obtained, and has special value in promoting the hog's ability to digest and utilize its other food. We do not think a reliable pork-production industry can be based upon wheat to the extent that it is upon corn in the corn States, but it is probable that there will be few years in which wheat cannot be profitably used in finishing a hog for market. As the finished animal is worth from a half-cent to a cent a pound more than the unfinished hog, the wheat feeder will have the benefit of this price as well as the gain in weight to pay for the wheat and pork.

THE DAIRY.

New Cattle for the St. Louis Fair.

THE cow demonstration proposed as one feature of the world's fair cattle exhibits at St. Louis next year will be on a much broader scale than anything of the sort heretofore attempted. While not in any way neglecting the dairy test idea, developed at the previous world's fairs, it is intended to illustrate in a more extensive way the practical adaptabilities of the different breeds of cow. The strictly dairy breeds are given opportunity to make a large showing, while the dual purpose breeds will be able to demonstrate their value for both milk and beef production. This means a demonstration rather than a competitive test, and will enable each breed participating to show its own peculiar advantages.

The Jersey, Shorthorn, Brown Swiss and French Canadian associations have already entered. Entries will be permitted from individuals on behalf of other breeds if received before December 1. Prizes will be offered to herds and individual cows and entries of from three to twenty-five cows may be made by representatives of any one breed. The same cows may compete for herd and individual prizes.

The tests will continue 100 days, beginning [illegible] and will be conducted in four classes, A, B, C and D. Test A is for the demonstration of the economic production of butter fat and butter; B of milk for all purposes related to dairying; C of all the products of the cow; and D for demonstrating the greatest net profit in producing market milk. In class C the calf will be judged for its beef merits. A cow may be entered in more than one class. Copies of the rules may be had by addressing to F. D. "(1.) The Lenoir vine, when growing upon its own roots, is practically resistant to the named disease, having been known to thrive and bear heavily for fifteen years in the midst of thousands of acres of dead and dying vineyards.

"(2.) The Lenoir vine as a top graft has been known to save tender Muscat roots for several years after all Muscats upon their own roots had been killed by the disease throughout the surrounding region.

Wheat for Hogs.

THE experiments made at the Washington Experiment Station confirm those made elsewhere in showing that a bushel of wheat under favorable circumstances will make twelve pounds of gain in weight in the case of swine of suitable age. THE POULTRY YARD.

The Moulting Season.

BIRDS hatched in the spring are in full plumage by and before September, but they do not moult that year unless forced on to maturity by stimulating food and made to lay a batch of eggs. Young birds moult far more easily than old birds. For instance, a yearling hen will sometimes get through her moult in five or six weeks, while an older bird takes three months, and even four. In the utility poultry yard we usually allow the hens to moult only once, so the moult should be quite an easy matter. Deaths are very rare during moult, yet they do occur; but the danger lies in the birds, run down and weak from the strain of changing their feathers, being more susceptible to cold and damp or disease.

If a bird looks very seedy it is well to remove it and place it in a well-sheltered pen by itself, feeding on stimulating food and giving it a little tonic in the drinking water, as described below. When the moult is very obviously on, it is well to start the breakfast of soft food again, if it has been dropped during the summer month, and add a little linseed meal to the mixture. It need not form more than one-seventh of the whole mixture.

A little meat or fresh scraps may be given with advantage. Green food at this time helps to keep the blood and bowels healthy, and even when on a grass run some lettuce or cabbage leaves should be given them daily, if available; failing garden stuff, a beet cut in halves and thrown down, or hung up in the run makes a good substitute. Finally, put a piece of sulphate of iron about the size of a walnut in a gallon of water, and add ten drops of sulphuric acid, and give them this to drink in an earthenware drinking fountain. These little matters may be often quite unnecessary. Indeed, often fowls, especially young fowls, moult almost imperceptibly; but, again, they may moult badly, and the tonic and green stuff and the feeding recommended will help them through.—[American Cultivator.

Death of Hens.

THERE are two principal causes of sudden death in poultry; the one apoplexy—effusion of blood on the brain, the other syncope—fatal fainting, the seat of which is, of course, in the heart. Both of these, especially the former, can be induced by overfeeding. A bird becomes inordinately fat, its liver does not act properly, and its blood becomes sluggish. Sudden excitement or a generally overwrought condition of the system causes one of the tiny vessels to give way in the brain, and paralysis is set up. A case of apoplexy should always be distinguished from one of syncope by the paralyzed state of the bird for some time before it dies, the head being often twisted round, the bird blinking its eyes as though it could see, but could not see straight. On the other hand, syncope—fatal fainting—is a matter of a few moments. The bird is apparently well, but after some unusual piece of exertion it falls down and is dead before it can be picked up. There is practically no cure for either of these troubles; the one is too sudden altogether, and the other—the brain trouble, apoplexy— is likely to recur. Often a bird will have an apoplectic seizure, and will slowly recover, but unless it is very carefully looked after and never allowed to overfeed itself, the trouble is sure to recur. The writer always advises fanciers, when they have had a case or two of sudden death among their poultry, to take it as a warning and reduce the food allowance, and treat them as though they had liver complaint—by saline aperients and by giving them some work to do to earn their living. This is always safe, and its adoption in time will often prevent more serious trouble.—[Orange Judd Farmer.

THE FARM.

Farm Insurance.

THE frequent occurrence lately of fires in which uninsured farm property has been destroyed must disturb the peace of many farmers whose buildings are unprotected. The seriousness of a fire loss comes close to tragedy, when a hard-working man who has worked the best part of his life to raise the mortgage is obliged to shoulder the debt again because his buildings have gone up in smoke with a forest fire, or a lightning stroke. Even if there is no fire, the money paid for premiums is repaid in the sense of security afforded by an insurance policy. But there is another side to the question. Beyond doubt a very large number of property owners in villages and farm districts have rebelled against the recent exactions of the insurance companies. The rates for a three-year policy are about as high as the sum paid for a five-year policy half a dozen years ago, an advance of from sixty to seventy per cent. Rented farms are discriminated against very severely. Buildings left unoccupied a short time are assessed heavy charges for permits, besides which the payment in case of fire is reduced. Insurance companies claim that all is necessary, and that farm insurance does not pay them. But the farmer, bearing in mind on the one hand the large salaries and dividends paid by many of the companies, and on the other hand recalling the lower cost of grange insurance, and other mutual insurance enterprises, is somewhat inclined to doubt whether the tremendous advances and the annoying restrictions are required by the conditions. There is a suspicion, in fact, that the companies have combined to fix the terms to suit themselves, and to tighten up the screws all the business will stand. The best hope of relief seems to lie in the growth of the coöperative insurance societies, which, through careful selection of risks and low cost of management, are able to offer a very wholesome competition.—[American Cultivator.

BARBAROUS PUNISHMENT.

It was sixty years ago that England abolished flogging at sea; it has long been abolished in our army and navy; and now the Czar of Russia has abolished the harshest remnants of the barbaric punishments of former times, namely, castigation with cudgels and cat-o'-nine tails, chaining to the car and shaving the head, which were still inflicted for certain offenses on persons exiled to penal settlements or to the mines. Castigation with the cat-o'-nine tails and even with cudgels not infrequently ended in death, and was one of the harshest forms of the death penalty, being death by torture. The abolition of the cudgel and of the "cat" does not, however, mean the prohibition of corporal punishment altogether. The revised statute of June 15 prescribes chastisement with birch rods up to 100 blows. Barbaric punishment can be inflicted by birch rods, if not as severely as by "cat" or cudgel. The better way would be to abolish punishment by flagellation altogether.—[Leslie's Weekly.

FRANCIS WILSON'S WAY.

Once upon a time, when Francis Wilson didn't have as comfortable living quarters as he now has, he went room-hunting where rates were reasonable. In one place which he inspected he found a red-headed landlady who was extremely persistent, although the room she had to offer was about the last one Wilson would have chosen to live in. He didn't want to say so, however, and was departing without stating definitely what he would do, notwithstanding the fact that the eager landlady did not want him to escape in that manner.

"Will you take the room?" she asked, pinning him down to a positive answer.

"Um—er," hesitated Wilson, crawfishing toward the door. "Thank you very much, madam, thank you, no, I won't take it now; can't you perhaps send it to me?"—[Collier's Weekly.

Painless Dental Service at a Moderate Cost.

To those whose teeth need the attention of a dentist I wish to make the emphatic and positive statement that my experience and modern office equipment enables me to give a service that is not only painless but lastingly satisfactory.

I work on the basis of giving each patient intelligent, skillful, careful and conscientious treatment—the kind that will remedy every tooth defect and that will improve the appearance of those who entrust their dental work to me.

I am gratified beyond measure at the uniform satisfaction my service gives and this is particularly pleasing because my practice is made up largely among those who have a positive dread of the dental chair and who have postponed giving their teeth attention until necessity and pain compelled them to seek my service. My business has steadily increased because I have adhered to fair dealing, painless dentistry, guaranteed work and moderate charges. You are invited to call.

PRACTICAL HYGIENE.

General inquiries on hygienic subjects of public interest will receive attention in these columns. No inquiries are answered by mail. Bright's Disease—Laryngitis.

THE following inquiry has been received from R. D.:

"Will you kindly inform me through the hygienic columns of The Times the symptoms of Bright's disease, and if there is any cure for it, through the application of hygiene. Also please inform me what to do in the case of laryngitis."

Several diseased conditions of the kidneys are designated by this name. The symptoms in the beginning are obscure, and may not be noticed for years. Pain and tenderness in the back may be entirely wanting. Among the prominent symptoms, when the disease is quite well developed, are bloating of the face, eyelids, etc.; swelling of the backs of the hands, and swelling of the feet. When all of these habitually occur in the morning, Bright's disease in some form may be suspected. But do not scare yourself by supposing that because you once in a while have a touch of one of these symptoms that you must necessarily have Bright's disease. If, in connection with the above, albumen be found in the urine, the diagnosis is reliable. See a conscientious family physician.

Diet is the most important. Good results have been reported from an exclusive diet of skim milk. In such cases about two quarts of milk should be consumed during the day. It should be sipped very slowly, remembering that milk is a food, not a drink. Otherwise the diet should consist of plain, easily digested food, and not too much of it—not more than two meals a day. Food containing much salt should be avoided, as common salt, being a mineral which the body cannot assimilate, extra work is thrown on the kidneys to eliminate it from the system. Use pure olive oil freely. A good sweat taken once a week will be found beneficial.

Acute laryngitis is a catarrhal inflammation of the mucous membrane, characterized by slight fever, suppressed voice, painful swallowing, some difficulty in breathing, and more or less spasmodic coughing. The approximate cause is usually exposure to cold and dampness, inhalation of irritating substances, and straining of the voice, as in addressing a meeting in the open air. There is, however, generally some deep-seated cause for the ailment to be found in an abnormal condition of the system. One variety of laryngitis may appear in connection with Bright's disease.

A moist climate is usually considered beneficial for this ailment. Benefit may be derived from the inhalation of hot vapor from boiling water in which a half teaspoonful of eucalyptus oil has been dropped.

Angleworm Oil.

A CORRESPONDENT recently inquired as to where she could get "angleworm oil," and the editor of this department had to pass on the inquiry as a conundrum that he could not solve. However, there are very few questions that some of the numerous readers of this department cannot answer. It is, therefore, not surprising to find that no less than seven answers have already been received to this correspondent's question. F. S. sends the following from Santa Monica:

"I noticed in the 'Care of the Body' department today that some one from Santa Monica asks about angleworm oil, and that you say that you do not know what it is. I will offer a short story of an incident which happened in my boyhood days in Ohio. My folks owned a valuable horse, which slipped on the ice and strained the tendons of one of its hind legs so that it could not put the heel on the ground, and had to walk on its toe for several months, when an old farmer told us to rub it with angleworm oil, which he said was made by gathering angleworms, putting them in bottles, and hanging in the sun until all the oil was tried out of them. Then strain it and use as a liniment. We did this, and it effected the desired results, and I will say that after that we never were without this oil, as it is good for so many strains and sprains, and it no doubt will help the inquirer from Santa Monica."

Why, however, such a filthy substance as angleworm oil? What particular virtue is the oil of these rotten worms supposed to possess that is not found in other oils. The editor of this department is not prepared to say that there may not possibly be some special quality about this oil, but is inclined to believe that it is something of a superstition, and would rather trust to eucalyptus oil, in case of pains, or cramps, or anything of that kind.

Citric Acid and the Kidneys.

SEVERAL weeks ago a correspondent wrote to this department urging that people who are affected with kidney disease should not eat oranges. The editor of this department did not attach much confidence to the idea that, apart from the sugar contents of the fruit, citric acid could be more injurious in such cases than any other fruit acid. However, he has since come across the writer of the communication, who proves to be a well-known and thoroughly trustworthy Los Angeles man. He asserts positively that whenever he has attempted to eat oranges, or other citrus fruits, it has been followed by a burning sensation in the bladder, which has not resulted when other fruits have been used.

Now, it would certainly be an interesting thing to ascertain whether others have noted similar results from the use of citric acid, which is found in oranges, grape fruit, limes and lemons.

As mentioned recently, another correspondent, who is troubled with diabetes, declared that he could eat navel oranges but not seedlings. As stated, such a nice distinction appears almost incredible, as citric acid is contained in all varieties of oranges, being disguised with more sugar in some than in others.

Bathing.

THE following article recently appeared in the Philadelphia Record:

"The talk turned naturally, for the heat was great, to baths. 'Baths don't conduce to health,' a clergyman said. 'I know many people who take them very seldom, and these people are quite as healthy as you or I. One day last fall I was visiting a manufacturer. He began to boast about his personal cleanliness. "I must be clean—I just must be," he said. "Once a week I must have my bath, no matter how inclement the weather may be. My wife says I'm a fool on the subject." That was very illuminating,' the clergyman went on. 'I heard another illuminating remark from a humble parishioner who was putting steam heat in his house. He said he wouldn't put a radiator in his bathroom. I remarked that this was odd. He asked me what was odd about it. I said I thought the family would particularly need heat in the bathroom when bathing in the winter. "Oh," he said, "we don't take baths in the winter." And yet this family was as robust and strong as any family you ever saw.'"

There is no doubt that bathing, like other hygienic practices, is frequently overdone. There is always a tendency among the public to run a good thing to extremes, or into the ground. We need not, however, go to the other extreme, preached by Mrs. Eddy, in her Christian Science book, where she says it is as foolish to put a baby into water as it is to put a fish into mud. The feelings are usually a safeguard in such cases. If you feel like plunging into a river or lake, or the ocean, and feel invigorated when you come out, you may safely take it for granted that it does you good, but if you feel a repugnance about going in, and shiver after you come out, you would do better to stay on dry land. In any case, don't stay in too long—ten minutes is usually enough—and never take a cold bath of any kind within two hours of a meal.

For purposes of cleanliness, a thorough sweat once a week, followed by a cold wash or spray, should be sufficient, and as a tonic, a sponge bath of salt water, on rising, followed by a vigorous rubbing.

A Child's Liver.

O. E. H. writes as follows from Santa Monica:

"Will you kindly give me a list of foods acting on the liver? My little boy, 4 years and 3 months old, has just recently developed decided biliousness, has severe attacks, from two to eight weeks apart. Between attacks, he is seemingly in the best of condition—bowels regular, and loose, but white and chalky. He eats no meat gravy, grease (except butter,) candy or puddings or cake, with the exception of once in a while custards. I don't like to dose a child of that age with calomel all the time. Can you help me? He lives an out-of-doors, active life, and his health has been remarkable until this condition developed. Thanking you for any assistance you may be able to offer."

It is not usual for a child of that age to be troubled with an affection of the liver, where his diet has been as sensible as it appears to have been in this instance. Some children inherit a tendency to biliousness. Don't give him calomel, or any other drug, but give him nature's calomel—tomatoes—a most valuable food for the liver. Let him eat freely of them, several times a day, with olive oil, if he can take it. Fresh tomatoes are to be preferred to canned tomatoes, as they, like almost all other canned foods, usually contain preservatives. However, use canned tomatoes where you cannot get the fresh ones.

It would be a good idea to give the child a few wet packs, either of the whole body or of the middle region. Also thoroughly manipulate, massage and thump the region over the liver for ten minutes, mornings and evenings.

A Healthy Centenarian.

THERE was published in this department recently the portrait of a hearty looking old gentleman, with the following inscription underneath: "Capt. G. E. D. Diamond of San Francisco. Taken on his 100th birthday. He was 107 on May 1 last." Readers of this department probably wondered as to the why and the wherefore of the publication of the portrait without any comment, especially as it appeared in the middle of an article on fleas. The fact is that, owing to some oversight, the descriptive matter that should have accompanied the cut became separated from it. Here is the article that should have appeared:

A few weeks ago an article was published in this department about Mr. Overton of Long Beach, who has attained the ripe age of 105. This week a portrait is presented of a man who is two years older, having celebrated his 107th birthday on the 1st of May last. It is Capt. G. E. D. Diamond, of San Francisco, who was born at Plymouth, Mass., on May 1, 1796, and immigrated with his parents that year to what is now Oxford county, Me. The picture was taken on Capt. Diamond's 100th birthday. A recent article in a San Francisco paper stated that the old gentleman walks over ten miles a day in pursuit of his vocation as a book agent.

At the request of The Times, Capt. Diamond sent the following communication. The letter, by the way, is written in a clear, firm handwriting, of which a high school graduate need not be ashamed. It will be observed that Capt. Diamond sets great store upon olive oil, the free use of which has been so often recommended in this department of The Times. It is understood that he uses it externally as well as internally. He has been requested to furnish further information in regard to this subject, his diet, etc.:

"I will give you the first article of my diet for longer life and more pleasure in living it. My experience with the use of fine pure olive oil, for food, for eighty-two years, it not only contains every element, organic, inorganic, necessary to sustain life indefinitely, but also contains other properties that open and keep open the alimentary canal (the keynote to perfect health.) It's the only tonic that I know of by personal experience that actually rejuvenates an old man and puts him in proper physical condition to compete with his younger brother in any vocation. It is, in a sense, a realization of Edison's dream of perpetual youth.

"In anticipation of your kind consideration, yours for perfect health and long life. I still hope that you forget me not. 28 Eighth street, San Francisco, Cal."

Physicians and Fees.

A PHYSICIAN, writing in a local contemporary, says this, in the course of his article:

"Whatever ranters and critics may say, the doctor is no fool, and no better proof of this can be given than his administering in many cases just what the patient calls for. Notwithstanding the fact that we are supposed to be more enlightened as a people than we were years ago, the doctor still frequently hears the patient ask for "something strong and with a taste that will do some good."

There are two sides to a doctor's business life—one the commercial, under the laws of which he gives what is demanded for a consideration; the other is that of a desire to aid suffering humanity regardless of remuneration, and we emphatically state our belief that the vast majority of physicians have this latter quality predominant. To harmonize the two is sometimes difficult, and unless there is coöperation from the patient it is often more so than it would be if he had that assistance."

Is not this another strong argument against the present illogical and foolish method of remunerating physicians—paying them only when we are sick? As The Times has previously suggested, would it not be an excellent idea to pay the doctors so much a year, to keep us in health, their pay ceasing when the person gets sick, as in China? This last feature might or might not be introduced, but in any case it would be a big improvement to pay the doctors regularly to keep us well. It would raise the profession to a higher plane, and would remove from the physician the temptation to be somewhat dilatory with a wealthy patient. The conscience and the financial interest of the physician would no longer be at war. A lawyer is financially interested in winning a case for a client. It is advantageous to a preacher to have his flock morally clean, but the physician only makes money while people are sick. A person or a family would not have to pay a large amount of money for such services, because, under such conditions, a great many people would make a regular payment to a physician, and he would be called upon to devote very little time, on an average, to each.

The physician referred to, in the course of his article, pays his respects also to the daring persons, who, while not possessing diplomas, have the assurance to say something in regard to health subjects. He says:

"We would like to plead, for the sake of the doctor and of the patient, for a complete confidence and trust in the physician when he is called on for his services. He will do better work, results will be more satisfactory in every way, if he is not hampered by suggestions from the patient or quotations from so-called authorities, or with a self-made diagnosis of the condition. When a person is sick or wants medical assistance he should approach the doctor with confidence that he is a better judge of the condition and its needs than the patient himself could possibly be. This mental condition gives the physician carte blanche to do what he considers wisest under the circumstances, and the result will be mutually much more satisfactory than could possibly be the case otherwise."

There is a good deal of "fudge" in this. It is not true that a physician, who sees a man perhaps for the first time, and is totally unacquainted with his past history and symptoms, is a better judge of the condition and its needs than the patient himself could possibly be. This is arrant nonsense. A person of average intelligence, who has reached middle age, and has devoted any attention whatever to his bodily make-up, should certainly be better able to judge of the significance of symptoms than a stranger, who sees him for the first time.

Carlyle said: "Every man is a fool or a physician at forty." Certainly, an intelligent man, who has reached middle age, should by that time know something about the needs and requirements of his system, the effect upon him of various foods and drinks, how he should exercise and bathe, and so forth. The subject of hygiene should be one of the most important branches of study in the schools. It is certainly of far more importance than the geography of Central Africa, or the anatomy of a butterfly. An intelligent man should no more think of sending for a physician every time he has a bellyache than he would of running to a lawyer whenever some one throws a cat over his backyard fence, or of going for a parson whenever he has a qualm of conscience. With a proper widening of the study of the care of the body, there would be little use for physicians, except in surgical cases, and as general advisors on health, a subject which, under the system of remuneration above suggested, they would then be encouraged to take up more thoroughly, while devoting less attention to experimenting on the patient with all sorts of drugs, ignoring the statement made by Sir Astley Cooper, the eminent physician to the late Queen of England that "the science of medicine is founded on conjecture, and improved by murder."

It is to be feared, however, that it will be some time ere poor weak man discontinues to hobble through life on three crutches, giving his soul into the care of a priest, his bodily goods into the care of a lawyer, and his body into the care of a doctor.

Fleas.

THE California flea refuses to down—that is, the discussion of the subject. It was announced several weeks ago that the "symposium" on fleas in this department was closed. However, here comes another, all the way from Mexico. As it has traveled so far, he may not have seen the notice in The Times, so it is here given:

"Try 'Tanglefoot' under your beds, and anywhere on the floors, or any old place where fleas hop. The fleas do the rest. The results are prompt and most satisfactory. On a single sheet during the first night's trial I caught, by actual count, more than nine hundred fleas. So you can judge whether or not I had fleas to fight. You can sleep on the floor now without a bite."

A woman writes that she successfully uses equal parts of oil of wintergreen and alcohol to kill fleas on her dog.

Fruit as Food.

A CORRESPONDENT in a local contemporary calls attention to the danger of eating unripe fruit. It is true that much fruit is gathered before it is ripe, and is offered for sale in the local stores, and by peddlers. It is also true that such fruit is injurious. It is, however, far less dangerous than fruit that is overripe. On this subject a San Diego physician writes to The Times as follows:

"You are right when you say that fruit commences to decay as soon as it is picked, just as flowers do. The trouble with fruit eaters is that they give no care to the quality of the fruit, upon which all depends. Overripe and stale fruit is bad, absolutely so, while fresh ripe fruit is good and wholesome. Here, again, begins the power of the almighty dollar. I have seen, again and again, people here for their health, standing around a fruit market, buying fruit because it was offered at a discount, giving no thought as to why. All fruit offered at a discount is simply because it is on the way to decay. The dealers well know that they have to get rid of it or lose it entirely. Such fruit is no good, and causes trouble.

"Dr. Dewey has given rise to many good and wholesome thoughts. He has, as all of us with one idea settled upon us, become cranky.

"Go on with your splendid work of educating the people to learn and know that the care of the stomach is all there is to it. I, however, often thought in reading your 'Care of the Body' that it would be a good thing to call it 'Care of the Stomach.'

"Dr. Dewey's apple theory is absurd. The Irish, Danes and Swedes, who are the the most healthy of nations, eat them at all hours of the day. His non-breakfast theory for the man of mental labor will do very well, but for the man of hard manual labor I do not think it will work."

In referring to the above communication it may be added that in Southern California every one should try to raise a few fruit trees, berries and melons in their gardens.

Diarrhoea.

TWO communications have been received this week on the subject of diarrhoea. The first, from Long Beach, is as follows:

"I am a subscriber of The Times, and take great interest in the excellent articles in your health department. Nearly every Sunday I notice articles in this department on constipation, but none in regard to chronic diarrhoea. Now, I am a sufferer from chronic diarrhoea. I have been so for years, and I have never been able to find anything that would do me any permanent good. Just at present I am trying the diet and no-breakfast cure. This helps me somewhat, but not very much. I have met a number of people here in Southern California who are afflicted with this complaint, and I am sure this subject is of unusual interest. Could you or some of your many readers kindly suggest some remedy that would relieve me? Please discuss the subject in your paper and greatly oblige."

The other comes from Lamanda:

"Will you be kind enough to give me some information on how to cure diarrhoea or to prevent it? I have been bothered with it for several years, but seem to be worse since coming to California. The rest of the family seem to be bothered with it here more than back in Nebraska. I take great pleasure in reading your articles on 'Care of the Body' in the illustrated weekly magazine, but I haven't noticed any for my complaint."

Doubtless diarrhoea, which some people refer to as "summer disease," is largely increased by the fact that people at this season of the year eat freely of fruit, which acts as a mild purgative, cleaning out the system. It is not wise to try to check this effort of nature to throw morbid matter out of the system, and any attempt to do so must inevitably be followed by injurious results. Get the whole system into good order by attending to hygienic rules, as laid down from week to week in this department. In the way of diet, live largely on rice, with warm skim milk, also eat freely of blackberries, until the guava season comes on, and then eat plenty of that

TOOTH TALK

No. 70.

Tooth Defects Cause Many Different Diseases.

The indirect consequences of tooth neglect are sufficiently numerous and also serious enough in character to prompt greater attention in the care of the teeth than the majority ordinarily give. As I have frequently explained in these talks, severe gastric disturbances are often caused by tooth defects which prevent proper mastication of the food. While digestive disorders are among the more common and best known of ailments caused by defective teeth, yet there are many other diseases equally, and in some instances, more serious, whose origin has been traced directly to tooth troubles. Medical records contain many instances where eye troubles, su h as conjunctivitis, inflammation of the cornea, partial loss of vision, abnormal protrusion of the eyeball and other diseases of the eye were caused directly or indirectly by decaying teeth. Medical records also show numerous cases where diseases of the ear had their origin in disturbances arising from decayed teeth. Personally I recall several cases where I have been summoned to assist a well known aurist in the diagnosis and treatment of cases of this character.

Tooth Decay Prevented

Tooth decay can not alone be arrested but can be entirely prevented. There is however only one method or means by which this can be accomplished and that is by my methods of prophylactic dentistry. This is the new or advanced dentistry by which, through a careful study of the conditions of the mouth, all abnormal tendencies, calculated to cause tooth decay or other tooth defects are accurately ascertained, after which by prophylactic treatment these abnormal tendencies are completely aborted and the mouth restored to a healthy normal condition. The secretions of the mouth receive particular attention in prophylactic dentistry for they have a marked effect and influence upon the tooth structure. I am in all instances, where secretions are of a character that have a detrimental effect, able to entirely change the character of the secretions, making them perfectly healthy in every particular, thereby removing entirely one of the main predisposing causes of tooth decay.

Crown and Bridge Work.

All who have ever seen my crown and bridge work and have had an opportunity to compare same with that of many other dentists, must have been impressed with the fact that my work bore upon its face every impress of superiority. And by questioning any of my patients this impression will be most emphatically maintained by the satisfying effects that my patients will tell you my crown and bridge work produces. It is due to a thorough understanding of all manner of dental work and the practice of prophylactic methods in all my work that I am able to accomplish such excellent and satisfactory results. In crowning a tooth I am very careful to first prepare the root by prophylactic treatment so that there will be no further chance or possibility of decay after crowning. In selecting the crown I am careful to choose one best adapted to the root and as I make twenty different styles of crowns (fully three times the number other dentists make,) I am able to obtain perfect results where, with a more limited number of crowns to choose from such good results would be impossible. In my bridge work after proper prophylactic preparation, I study very carefully the roots upon which the bridge is to be fastened and so construct the latter that the pressure on these roots will be equalized. This is of the utmost importance in producing bridge work that is comfortable as well as durable. I also construct all bridge work so as to preserve the facial contour and am very careful in the selection of the teeth used, and in this manner all evidences of artificial dentures are entirely overcome.

Consult Me Free.

Do not hesitate to call and see me regarding the character of any tooth troubles you may have. I do not make any charge for consultation or examination and will give you my professional opinion of the work required, also tell you the cost of same. My charges are reasonable in all cases, no more than you would expect good work to be executed for, and no more than you will be glad and willing to pay for the high class work that I invariably give to all my patients.

Electric Appliances, so Called.

A SAN DIEGO correspondent sends The Times a circular relating to a so-called Edison "magno-electro vitalizer." He writes:

"Will you kindly inform us if the contrivances herewith described are of any value for the cure of diseases. This is the third time I have been addressed on this subject. Is Mr. Edison really connected with this company?"

There is nothing in the circular to show that Mr. Edison is connected with this enterprise. A number of enthusiastic indorsements are given from leading American papers, such as the New York Sun, the Boston Globe, the Philadelphia North American, the Washington Post, the Chicago Inter-Ocean, the St. Louis Globe-Democrat and the Cincinnati Enquirer, but there is nothing whatever to show that these notices have not been inserted in those high-class papers in the shape of paid advertisements. Probably they have. A correspondent wrote recently that he had tried this contrivance without benefit.

A number of useless contrivances are widely advertised in the shape of so-called electric and magnetic cures for disease. That electricity, when properly administered, possesses curative qualities, cannot be denied, although the editor, from extensive observance, is inclined to believe that improvement effected in this way is only temporary. However that may be, it is certain that a great majority of these so-called electric and magnetic devices do not possess sufficient power to effect any curative work whatever, and those who use them are simply throwing away their money.

Anointing With Oil.

AT a recent meeting of faith healers, held in the Temperance Temple, Los Angeles, the ceremony was performed of anointing sick people with oil, in accordance with the following biblical command, which is found in the fifth chapter of the Epistle of St. James:

"Is any sick among you, let him call for the elders of the church, and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him."

As The Times has shown on several occasions, this practice of merely sprinkling or rubbing a few drops of oil on a person is founded on a misinterpretation of the scripture passage. The Roman Catholic Church has adopted the practice in its rite of "extreme unction," which is administered with great solemnity to the dying. What the Apostle James referred to in his letter was the hygienic practice, common in the East, of rubbing the body of a sick person over with olive oil, as a hygienic remedy. This practice has of recent years been revived by some intelligent western physicians and hygienists, with excellent results. The oil is found not only nourishing, but valuable in fever cases, reducing and equalizing the temperature.

Capt. Diamond of San Francisco, who is over 107 years of age, and whose portrait was published in The Times a few weeks ago, is said to attribute his good health at this advanced age largely to the free use of olive oil, internally and externally.

Of course, cures may sometimes be made by merely marking a person with a few drops of oil. So they might be made by using vinegar, or wine, or milk in the same way, or by Christian Science, or relics of saints in a holy grotto. It is an indubitable fact that cures have been effected in all these ways, but that is merely suggestion, not hygiene. The wise healer will make use both of suggestion and hygiene, as the wise physician will always give his patients bread pills, or a little colored water, even if he does not believe in drugs—that is to say, unless he has the good fortune to come across a patient of more than average intelligence, who does not believe in such superstitions.

Pasteurized Milk.

THE Agricultural Department of the United States has issued a bulletin on the milk supply of cities, in the course of which it says:

"The practice of pasteurization appears to be gradually extending, yet the medical fraternity is divided in opinion as to its expediency, and the best sentiment favors natural milk, produced and delivered in such a pure and protected condition as to be greatly superior to any pasteurized article."

Great claims were made for the Pasteur process, as applied to milk, when it was first brought out, as they have been for toxines and other artificial means of combating disease. How many such processes that have been advocated throughout the world with a great blaze of trumpets as something wonderful and revolutionary in the art of healing, have stood the test of time?

Catarrh.

MRS. C. B. H. writes as follows, from Oceanside: "Myself and husband read your page in the Sunday Times with great interest, but so far have not found any one troubled as my husband is. Please advise me as to what you think his trouble is and a remedy, if any. His symptoms are, sneezing, very often all day, with watery discharge from nose, nose stopped up most of the time, one nostril at a time. On lying down on side the opposite nostril will open, and turning on other side the other nostril will open, as if something soft and flabby went from one side to the other, and on snuffing we can hear a sort of flutter or rattle.

"The sneezing is very bad, three or four times in succession, with the watery discharge continually. He has been troubled thus about five years. He feels well, eats well, and we think would sleep well if not for the nose trouble. The other organs of the body perform their duty perfectly. He is not at all nervous, but very thin in the face, and his body is not so fleshy as it once was. Just now he has a bad breaking out of pimples on his nose and the sides of the cheeks.

"This warm weather now prevailing causes the nose to stop up worse, causing a sense of fullness in the nose. Tell me if you think he has catarrh or a polypus, or both. He spits up (of mornings) a white jelly-like stuff, seeming to gather in the throat during the night. Hoping to hear your advice through your valuable department in the Los Angeles Times."

This is another of those inquiries that come under the head of those referred to in a statement printed at the beginning of this department every week, as follows: "The Times does not undertake to answer inquiries on hygienic subjects that are merely of personal interest, or to give advice on individual cases. General inquiries on hygienic subjects of public interest will receive attention in these columns. No inquiries are answered by mail."

This is probably a variety of catarrh. The only suggestion that the editor of this department can make is for the sufferer to follow out the hygienic rules in regard to diet, exercise, bathing, etc., as given from week to week in this department, and endeavor to get the system into better condition. No local treatment of such an affection can possibly be of more than temporary benefit, although he might try the inhalation of eucalyptus oil in steam.

A Clean City.

IT is said that according to mortality statistics St. Paul is the healthiest city in the world. There is no mystery about this. It is simply due to cleanliness. There are great public baths and other health-giving facilities, such as playgrounds for children. This is an example for other cities. Not long ago another northern city, Cleveland, showed that a smallpox epidemic may be averted by absolute cleanliness. A broom is more powerful for good than a bottle.

I announce to the world that I have an absolute cure for drunkenness in White Ribbon Remedy, based on thousands of cures made of the most obstinate cases. In a majority of cases White Ribbon Remedy was given secretly in tea, coffee or food, without the patient's knowledge. By degrees the patient gets a distaste for all intoxicants and finally leaves off altogether. It is wonderful, how the hard drinker has thus been reclaimed and restored to his family and friends. White Ribbon Remedy is easily given by following the simple directions. It is tasteless, odorless, and perfectly safe to give or take. White Ribbon Remedy will cure or destroy the unnatural appetite for all alcoholic drinks, whether the patient is a confirmed inebriate, a "tippler," social drinker or drunkard. It is impossible for any one to have an appetite for alcoholic liquors after using White Ribbon Remedy. It restores a victim to normal health, builds up him or her steady nerves, and a determination to resist temptation. Builds up the will power.

As the following illustrations show some of the instruments in my office that are used in making examinations of eyes, I will try to give you a description of the two larger ones in the picture, by which the two figures are seated is a combination retinascope and ophthalmoscope. The definite use of the retinascope is to measure sight by means of reflected lights and mirrors, and the original purpose of the instrument was to make this practical in the hands of a skilled who understood the principles theoretically—unable to use the method without mechanical assistance. Later the instrument was improved by the inventor, and called a mechanical ophthalmoscope. With this improvement can now be used for the purpose of examining the interior of the eye, optic nerve, etc., and can also be utilized for the purpose of taking a photograph of the inside of the eye.

To try to give an intelligent reply to the question as to how this wonderful instrument is constructed would be useless unless you understood the laws of reflection and reflection of lights, etc., and it would be much better for you to come and see the instrument and the accomplishments of the same would interest you more than the principles of construction. I will say that the improvements I have made in the instrument make it, I believe, the most exactly this pattern in existence, and I have made for the purpose of illustrating and describing the eyes to patients, or friends who are

The smaller instrument to the right of the picture is one of the original ophthalmoscopes which is built strictly on scientific principles and answers the express purpose of magnifying the corneas of the eye and measuring the surface thereof. In other words, this instrument will scientifically and accurately register any irregularity in the curvature of the corneas, and is extremely valuable in the measurement of children's eyes. Defects of vision can be traced without requiring them to exercise any judgment in the matter. By the assistance of these instruments it is possible to examine the eyes and estimate deficiencies in sight or hearing without the assistance of drugs, which are commonly used by many oculists in paralyzing the eye and dilating the pupil before examinations are made.

The old methods are obsolete with the modern instrument, and eye and ear examinations can now be made much, but a few years ago, were entirely impossible. The X-Ray has added materially to modern science, but can hardly be compared with some of these instruments for practical purposes.

Another instrument which I have recently perfected for my own special use, and it is the only one of its kind completed, was built to fill a long-felt want in my profession, as it has many advantages to the specialist. I soon had glissaded a thousand feet down to the place where I had heard the chamois whistle and started up. We were talking quite loudly when suddenly, without the slightest warning, I found myself in the middle of a band of chamois some thirty or forty in number. New Optical Instruments. To Whom Shall We Trust Our Eyes?

DR. WALTER I. SEYMOUR.

As the following illustrations show some of the instruments in my office that are used in making scientific examinations of eyes, I will try to give you a brief description of the two larger ones in the picture. The one at which the two figures are seated is a combination of retinascope and ophthalmoscope. The definite purpose of the retinascope is to measure sight by means of reflected lights and mirrors, and the original purpose of the instrument was to make this practical in the hands of the oculist who understood the principles theoretically but was unable to use the method without mechanical assistance. Later the instrument was improved upon by the inventor, and called a mechanical ophthalmoscope, and with this improvement can now be used for the purpose of examining the interior of the eye, optic nerve, retina, etc., and can also be utilized for the purpose of making a photograph of the inside of the eye.

To try to give an intelligent reply to the question as to how this wonderful instrument is constructed would be useless unless you understood the laws of refraction and reflection of lights, etc., and it would be much better for you to come and see the instrument itself, as the accomplishments of the same would interest you far more than the principles of construction. Suffice it to say that the improvements I have added to the instrument make it, I believe, the only one of exactly this pattern in existence, and I employ it here for the purpose of illustrating and describing defects of eyes to patients, or friends who accompany them to witness the examination of their eyes. The photographic feature of the instrument is a valuable one from a scientific standpoint, but seldom used in everyday practice.

The smaller instrument to the right of the picture is one of the original ophthalmometers, which is built strictly on scientific principles and is for the express purpose of magnifying the cornea of the eye and measuring the surface thereof. In other words the instrument will scientifically and accurately register any irregularity in the curvature of the cornea, and it is very valuable in the measurement of children's eyes as defects of vision can be traced without requiring the child to exercise any judgment in the matter. By the use of these instruments it is possible to examine eyes and estimate deficiencies in sight or physical defects without the assistance of drugs, which are so commonly used by many oculists in paralyzing the nerves and dilating the pupil before examinations of the eyes are made.

The old methods are obsolete with the modern specialist, and eye and ear examinations can now be made much better, but a few years ago, were entirely impossible. The X-Ray has added materially to modern science, but can hardly be compared with some of these instruments for practical purposes.

Another instrument which I have recently perfected for my own special use, and it is the only one of its kind ever completed, was built to fill a long-felt want in my profession, as it has many advantages to the busy oculist. It contains all the lenses and combinations used in fitting glasses, so arranged that they can be applied to the patients' eyes in such rapid succession as to do away with the tedious method of trying one lens at a time. This is of great advantage to the patient as well as the operator, as the former's eyes are not taxed nor strained as they are in the old way which wearies the eyes in the effort to determine which lenses suit them best.

Similar instruments have been made with the view of doing away with the old method, but this is the only one which is so arranged that the patient may have both eyes fitted and be enabled to describe the condition of sight that is obtained by using the two eyes together; all other instruments being made to correct but one eye at a time, thus leaving an uncertainty as to how the two eyes will work together when the lenses are made according to the measurements.

The instrument is of especial value in making examinations by artificial light, as all lenses can be passed before the eye automatically.

These are only a small per cent. of the appliances, electrical and otherwise, that are of such valuable assistance to the modern oculist and optician, such as the prisoptemeter, formeter, muscular tests, color tests, tests for the field of vision, instruments for oscillation, manipulation, vacuum and massage treatments, all of which would require time and space to describe, and perhaps be prosy reading to anyone unless interested from a personal standpoint, in which case you are invited to make personal investigation.

OCULIST, OPTICIST, OPTICIAN.

As there seems to be a confusion in the minds of many as to the exact difference in the meaning of these three different words, it may be well to define them according to some modern dictionaries before passing any comments on the merits of each as relates to their ability to properly diagnose or treat defective eyes or eyesight.

Oculist—A physician whose specialty is the treatment of diseases of the eye; an ophthalmologist.

Opticist—A person skilled or engaged in the branch of physical science which treats of light, lenses, the construction of the eyes, and the laws of vision.

Optician—One who makes and sells optical glasses or instruments.

These unbiased definitions seem to clear the ground wonderfully, and resolve the question into one of mere qualifications; but as there have often been lively discussions between the oculist and the optician as to the fitting of glasses and who possesses the best qualifications for the work, it may be wise for the prospective patient to give some thought to the matter from an unbiased standpoint. Each has a powerful argument to advance, actuated, of course, only by the highest motives, yet they arrive at directly opposite conclusions, and it is probable the truth lies somewhere between the two.

The oculist, who, as a physician, may be highly skilled in the examination and treatment of the eyes from a disease standpoint is hardly expected to be an expert mathematician, which would enable him to cope with the question of proper glasses as intelligently as might be expected from the skilled opticist.

On the other hand the term opticist is rather ambiguous in the meaning that it may convey to different minds, as it is only recently that an exclusive field in this line has been protected by legislation.

Oculist and optician alike have been permitted to call themselves opticists regardless of qualifications, and until the field becomes cleared and the dignity of the opticist established on a basis of its own, such as dentistry, osteopathy, etc., you must use your own judgment in chosing between the oculist and the optician (or a combination of the two,) in regard to the treatment of your eyes or fitting them with glasses.

I think from a strict definition of the word we should leave the word optician entirely out of the question, as merely a worker or dealer in lenses of whose ultimate effect upon the eyes he knows little; but, as a matter of fact, the meaning of the word optician, as commonly accepted, is so closely connected with that of oculist that at least half of you cannot readily define the difference.

I am told daily by people wearing glasses that they have been fitted by an oculist, when, in reality, close questioning reveals the fact that they have been fitted in a store by an optician. And it is not surprising that the thoughtful person should have well-grounded objections to placing the care of his eyes in the hands of the exclusive oculist or optician, for competency is evidently lacking when it takes both oculist and optician to produce a perfect pair of spectacles. Obviously, if perfect glasses are required their construction must not be based wholly upon medical skill nor yet upon the mere knowledge of the optician, as the best results should be obtained when the lenses are prescribed, designed and made under the personal direction of an oculist who is also qualified as an expert optician.

As we have already remarked in this article that these two qualifications in separate lines are rarely possessed by one person, we do not wish to pose as this special personality, except so far as real facts bear us out in the statement.

In our work here in the city at 420 West Sixth street, we have established ourselves in what we think to be an exclusive field. As the treatment of all eye, ear, nose and throat troubles has such close bearing upon the sight and health conditions, we have taken up the work as specialists in these lines only. We have subdivided the work into that of the oculist, aurist and optician, and while each man of our company is a physician, and, in the accepted terms of the profession, combines all three qualifications in himself, each gives his exclusive time and attention to his specialty within a specialty, and we all work harmoniously and combine our diagnoses of each case as to the relative bearing of a certain defect, on other physical conditions. In other words, in regard to eye, ear, nose and throat troubles, you will have the special attention of one giving his exclusive time to the one science.

In treatment of eyes we not only fit glasses, but they are prescribed, made and fitted under our personal direction, and in each and every instance, if not ultimately entirely satisfactory, you can return them to us individually and have change of lenses or readjustment made, without question as to who is responsible—the optician or oculist—as we combine the work of the two under a single head.

We will continue giving free consultation for a short time, and trust that those wishing to talk to us about their eyes or ears will remember our hours, 10 to 12 and 2 to 4, except Sunday. 420 W. Sixth street, facing Central Park from the south.

HUNTING CHAMOIS IN A CLOUD.

The ascent up the excessively steep slope, with the loose snow breaking under one's steps, was hard work, but the fresh signs of game as I reached higher elevations and a whistle or two out of the dense fog, emitted by chamois at no great distance, made it all the more exciting that one's range of vision was so extremely limited. The top of the ridge, some 3000 feet over the pass, consisted of a black, rocky needle-like pinnacle, too steep for snow to lie, and on scrambling hand over hand to the top, I found to my surprise that it just topped the sea of white mist.

My men had glissaded a thousand feet down to about the place where I had heard the chamois whistle on my way up. We were talking quite loudly when suddenly, without the slightest warning, I found myself in the midst of a band of chamois some thirty or forty in number. As I had been sliding down at a great pace I nearly passed a beast or two within reach of my Bergsteck, and one kid, in its frantic haste to join its dam, nearly ran me down. Throwing myself backward into the snow, and wrenching off the covering of bolt and muzzle, the chamois, whose surprise seemed to be even greater than ours, actually gave me time to get in a quick shot at what looked like a buck before they vanished in the dense mist.

"You have hit him right enough," exclaimed the keeper; but I was not so very certain about it, for it was a case of pulling the trigger before the rifle was well up to my shoulder. When we reached the spot where the animal had been overtaken by my soft-nosed Mannlicher bullet, a few spurts of blood put a rosier hue on the outlook. As the snow was scored up by countless tracks and the trail of blood soon stopped, we separated in order to more quickly find the wounded beast. I had not gone far before I found my quarry—it was a barren doe, unfortunately—lying dead with my bullet through her shoulders.—[W. A. Baillie-Grohman, in Outing.

BILL GRANZY AND THE LAND "STEAMBUTS."

Last week, one o' the summer folks hed one o' them new-fangled land steambuts come down. Utermoble, they call her, and I want tu tell ye she's a slick one. Gosh er mighty, how she can go! But I'm afeard we shall hev trouble until the hosses in town get used tu it. Bill Ganzy was comin' up from the neck the other day with a load o' milk, and when thet land steambut went by him his old hoss, thet ain't gone faster'n a walk in ten years, I guess, shied out o' the road and into a fence. Spilt all the milk and raised ruckshuns round there fer a few minutes. The owner of the utermobile was all right, though; he paid Bill fer all o' the milk and somethin' handsome besides tu, I hearn. It was so much, anyway, thet Bill said he'd be comin' up the same road next mornin' with another load o' milk, and he was kinder hopin' he'd meet the utermoble and hev his milk cart upsot agin. Beats all how everlastin' graspin' some people is. They tell me thet all hosses is 'fraid on 'em more or less at fust, and can't seem tu do nothin' tu prevent it. Ezra Huckins says he b'lieves that if they hed a pictur painted on each side o' the utermobile o' a nice pile o' red apples, a few ears o' yaller corn, and a nose-bag or tew o' oats, thet, instead o' shyin', the hosses would come right up tu it. It might not work, o' course, but maybe it's wurth tryin'.—["Cap'n Titus," in Outing.

A New Epoch in the History of Building in this City.

[AUTHORIZED ANNOUNCEMENT.]

CONSTRUCTIVE ENTERPRISE.

A BRIEF RESUME OF SOME NOTABLE ENGINEERING ACHIEVEMENTS.

THE present is distinctively an era of growth and prosperity in building circles throughout the State, and, as in many respects, Los Angeles is in the lead. A study of the lists of building permits issued in the principal cities of the country shows Los Angeles well to the fore as regards numbers of permits issued and the total amount invested in the improvements, even when compared to such metropolitan cities as St. Louis, Kansas City, St. Paul, Seattle, and many of the great Eastern cities. The summer season shows no sign of abatement of the rush, and what was formerly a dull period of the year with contractors, architects and builders, finds most of them working to full capacity. Strikes and kindred labor disturbances that have upset the equilibrium of many communities less fortunate have been noticeably absent in Los Angeles, and little has occurred to prevent the rapid completion of contracts, unless it has been the difficulty of securing sufficient material for the work undertaken. In this city alone there is now, according to Superintendent of Buildings Julius W. Krause, over $12,000,000 worth of buildings either in course of construction or in immediate contemplation. It is a noteworthy fact, too, that the present marks a distinctly new era in building throughout the city. The character of the buildings now being erected, including both public and private, is of an imposing and enduring architecture, and Los Angeles may be said to be especially fortunate in having drawn to her limits a class of architects, contractors and builders who have demonstrated their genius and ability as evinced in the improved and modern style of buildings now in vogue. In this connection it is interesting to note, that in a number of instances the services of Los Angeles architects and contractors have been engaged for work under construction in many of the Eastern States, as well as in all parts of California.

While office buildings have been erected by the score, where formerly there were one-story shacks, and beautiful homes have risen to take the place of the humble little adobe cottages of the early residents of the city, it is in the erection of immense manufacturing plants that the city has probably excelled, for, be it known, few cities in the country can boast of engineering feats that rival that of the erection of the 185-foot concrete steel chimney used by the Pacific Electric Railway Company at their power-house in this city. Engineering and cement journals of wide circulation and unquestioned authority have devoted considerable space in commenting most favorably upon this special piece of work, the contract for which was secured by Mr. Carl Leonardt, of Los Angeles, who is an expert specialist in the line of cement and concrete construction work. In giving the contract for the erection of this mammoth chimney the company did so with the understanding and assurance that it was more economical than it would be to erect a chimney of either brick or steel. The correctness of the assertion and the superiority of the composition has been proven by time, and this class of work will undoubtedly be largely used in the future. In this immense concrete steel stack, Los Angeles enjoys the distinction of being the home of the largest and tallest cement stack in the world, and the accompanying illustration will show quite plainly the artistic effect of the huge affair. In the construction of this chimney, hundreds of barrels of California cement from the factory of the Colton Portland Cement Company's factory, at Colton, Cal., were used. In fact, all the material used in its construction was a California product, and local labor was employed, so that the large sums of money disbursed redounded to the direct benefit of Los Angeles. Despite adverse criticism, at the time the plans were submitted and the work undertaken, time has proved the entire success of the project, and since its completion orders have been received for similar stacks, one from the United States government's League Island dry dock, and one for a large manufacturing concern of Pittsburgh. Owing to the large amount of work on hand, Mr. Leonardt was unable to accept them.

The Pacific Electric Railway Company, popularly known as the Huntington lines, have had a completely equipped plant built for the accommodation of their interurban electric railway systems, and the car houses, battery-houses, power-house, with its enormous concrete engine foundations, and the machine shops and all substations for the generation of electricity are modern throughout, and were constructed by C. Leonardt, under the supervision of Epes Randolph, general manager of the Huntington interests in this city, and Mr. E. S. Cobb, engineer in charge of buildings for the company, who are acknowledged authorities on all engineering matters, particularly those pertaining to concrete when properly constructed and reinforced.

The management of the Huntington interests also awarded to Mr. Leonardt the contract for the concrete foundation for the handsome new ten-story building being erected at the corner of Sixth and Main streets. Owing to the great weight of the building, the foundation is of unusual strength and capable of supporting immense weights. The fire-proofing contract was later awarded to him, and some idea of the extent of the work may be gained from the knowledge that this alone called for the expenditure of a quarter of a millio while over 10,000 barrels of Portland cement, of plaster of paris, one car of wire, fourteen of steel studding, and twenty-five cars of metal lath and floor metal will be used in the tion, giving a floor space equal to over twelve may prove a source of surprise to residents of to learn that in the Huntington Building, Lo may lay claim to the largest office building cago, while there are few in that city or New are larger. Another of the most recent of the con taken is that of the Hellman Building, now of construction at the corner of Fourt streets. of the Llewellyn Iron Works form the skeleton work of the building, and in this connection it is interesting to note that through the enterprise of the management of the Llewellyn Iron Works, the steel was imported as raw material from the Eastern mills, and the cutting, punching and assembling all done at their establishment. This is the first instance in the history of building on the Pacific Coast, where material has been imported in this form, and the benefits accruing to Los Angeles and the entire coast from the added wages disbursed by skilled workers in handling the steel girders is immeasurable.

Another of the most recent of the contracts undertaken is that of the Heilman Building, now under course of construction at the corner of Fourth and Spring streets. This imposing nine-story structure is being erected under the same system of fire-proofing described in the Huntington Building. It is the purpose of Mr. Herman W. Heilman, the owner, to make of this block a model office building. No expense is being spared to make it the most highly finished building of the kind in the city. Among the features that will appeal most strongly to the general public will be the two-story marble entrance, and the magnificent marble interiors. It may be interesting to state that the contractor on the work, Mr. Leonardt, is being compensated for his work upon the percentage basis, much in the manner that architects are compensated. This is the first instance in this city where a contractor has been remunerated in this way. The custom is now being generally adopted in large Eastern cities, and is claimed to be a most pleasing and satisfactory way of adjusting this somewhat delicate but important matter. The new building of the Edison Electric Company, while not worthy of more than passing mention as compared to such structures as the Heilman, and Huntington blocks, still embraces many features that a few years ago would have entitled it to distinction in this city. It is fire-proof throughout, and will have a large amount of floor space. Mr. Leonardt is now building a 170-foot steel concrete chimney for this company at their plant in East Los Angeles, the general plans being on the same line as those erected for the Pacific Electric Railway Company.

It is only within the past few years that interior fire-proof concrete work in buildings has been recognized as practical and necessary. As Los Angeles has come to have her office buildings taken on more the appearance of a metropolitan city, and such buildings as the Stimson, on Broadway, and the famous Pasadena hostelry, the Hotel Green, have been made absolutely fire-proof by the system introduced by Mr. Leonardt, who is acknowledged authority on the subject of cement and concrete construction work, such as foundations for reservoirs, bridges and fire-proofing. He has had the grading and cementing for such large subdivisions as the Nevin, Dalton, Craveq, Wilshire, Palm [illegible] a number of others. While a large force of men are at present engaged in building six miles of walks [illegible] through the Huntington Improvement Company property at Pasadena. The fire-proofing of the new County Courthouse and also of the new Los Angeles County Jail are both specimens of his system of [illegible].

It is a source of pride to residents of Los Angeles that her architects and contractors can successfully compete with those of other parts of the country despite the disadvantages of distance, etc., but such is the case, and one of the most conspicuous examples of enterprise is that of the erection of the Oxnard Beet Sugar Company's extensive factory at Oxnard, California. This plant is one of the most extensive beet-sugar factories in the world, with a daily capacity of 2000 tons of beets. The contract for all foundation, and brick work, fire-proof floor construction of the buildings, as well as the extensive system of reservoirs and ditches used in connection, are the result of contracts awarded to Mr. C. Leonardt. For the past six years a force of men have been almost constantly employed in constructing additional buildings, etc., for the company, the extent of whose holdings can scarcely be appreciated without a personal inspection of the plant. There are miles and miles of cement ditches, connecting the factory with the ocean, and running inland an equal distance for the water supply that is piped through these cement ditches directly to the factory and town. The daily supply of water is sufficient to provide a city of 100,000 with an adequate amount for all purposes. The Oxnard factory, at Chino, Cal., better known as the Chino Beet Sugar Company's plant, was also constructed by the same contractor, as well as the Oxnard plant at Rocky Ford, Col.; the Ames sugar factory at Omaha, Neb., and one erected for a Cleveland concern, at Loveland, Col. Mr. Leonardt recently remodeled and enlarged a similar factory in Michigan. He is an expert in this particular line of work, a feature of the construction of these factories being the limited amount of time allowed the contractor for the completion of his contract. All the factories named are the largest in their respective localities and some of them the most extensive in the world.

Mr. Leonardt, after looking for many years for suitable sites and conditions for the establishment of a cement factory, about a year ago found one in Colorado, midway between Florence and Cañon City, on the line of both the Santa Fé and the Denver and Rio Grande railroads. After most thorough and careful tests, all of which showed to the best advantage, he organized a company and built a modern cement factory entirely of steel and concrete, with a daily capacity of 1200 barrels, which has, since its completion last fall, been running to its full capacity. A recent test of the leading cements of Germany, England and the United States made by representatives of the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company, at Pueblo, Col., resulted in their deciding in favor of the product of this plant, known as the Colorado Portland Cement Company, and an order for 100,000 barrels was placed at once. It will surprise many to learn that much of the better class of cement work constructed within the past few months in Los Angeles has been made of the product of this Colorado factory, and it speaks volumes for it to say that it can successfully compete with other factories and overcome the disadvantage of 2000 miles and high freight charges.

One of the most recently completed pieces of work brought to a successful consummation was that of the concrete bridge built for the city of Santa Monica, Cal. This structure, which is 400 feet in length, has two 75-foot spans and a 100-foot roadway, the tracks of the Los Angeles Pacific Railway crossing the same. From an engineering standpoint the most remarkable feature about the structure is the six-inch crown of the bridge. Yet the stability of the bridge is unquestioned, and the accompanying photograph will show its perfectly symmetrical outlines.

Some idea of the local work carried on may be judged from the announcement that forces of men are engaged in possibly a score of different places throughout the city, working on concrete foundations, grading for curbs and sidewalks, erecting four, five, six, seven and ten-story buildings and finishing many pieces of ornamental work similar to the accompanying illustration of the cement fountain in the grounds of Mr. C. A. Canfield's home. At the present time some 400 men are on the pay roll, ranging from the day laborer to the most skilled artisans and mechanics.

A number of the handsome buildings in the capital of the Hawaiian Islands, including the imposing six-story Stangenwald Building, which would prove an ornament to any American city; the Panahou School, a cut of which is reproduced; the Automobile Club Building, and the Club stables, are the result of Mr. Leonardt's work the last named buildings being constructed entirely of concrete. The famous Young's Hotel, the finest in the islands, was rendered fire-proof by the same system that is being installed in the Huntington Building in this city.

The Kern River electric project, which will furnish almost unlimited power to Los Angeles this fall, is another of the extensive pieces of work constructed under the supervision of Mr. Leonardt. The foundations for the immense twelve-foot wide and ten-foot high flume which crosses the river at that point are embedded twenty-four feet below the water line, and rise thirty feet above the river bed. They are capable of supporting the weight of a railroad train, and when the work is complete the flume will be eighty feet above the river bed, supported on an iron and steel bridge which rests upon these immense foundation piers, pictures of which accompany this article. The power-house when completed will be built entirely of concrete. In addition to this, there has been a number of miles of ditches and tunnels cemented, while four highway bridges built of concrete have been erected to enable the contractors to bring in the materials and machinery necessary for the plant.

The subject of national irrigation, which has been engrossing the attention of the public for the past few months, will receive an added impetus when the result of a series of tests now being made are made public. For some time Mr. Leonardt has been constructing concrete pipes reinforced by steel rods passing around the pipe at stated intervals, and as soon as the pipe is old enough government engineers will subject it to severe tests to ascertain its strength and merits when compared to wooden or steel pipe. The object of the government is to use this pipe in hollows and low places instead of incurring the expense of fluming the water across such depressions. The economical points to be gained are many, and Mr. Leonardt is confident of the outcome of the experiments, which if successful will mean much to the arid West, and California in particular.

One of the most recent of the contracts undertaken, although at present delayed by litigation, is that of the erection of a million-dollar concrete dam in the McCloud River, Northern California, almost at the foot of Mt. Shasta. This is to store water for a power plant intended to furnish light and power to that portion of the State, and is one of the greatest enterprises ever undertaken in the north. These are a few of the enterprises in which Los Angeles has figured as the headquarters of a progressive and enterprising class of men, prominent among whom are her architects and contractors.

APE-LIKE PAPUANS.

LONDON, Sept. 7.—A Melbourne dispatch to the Daily Chronicle says the commissioner of British New Guinea reports the discovery of an extraordinary tribe of marsh-land dwellers in the island of Papua. Owing to the swampy ground and tangled undergrowth walking and canoeing are alike impossible. The native dwellings are built in trees, and as a result of the non-existing the natives are usually using the use of their lower limbs and are unable to walk on hard ground without their feet bleeding. They have developed enormously their legs and thighs are atrophied. In figure and gait they are ape-like.

NEGROES AND GEMS.

NEW YORK, Sept. 6.—With the arraignment of two negroes in Yorkville court today was revealed the theft of jewelry worth $10,000 from B. J. Herter of the Antoinette Hotel in East Fifty-eighth street. The gems were taken form a desk in the sitting-room of their apartment while Mr. and Mrs. Herter were out driving yesterday. Herter suspected Reuben Worrow, a mulatto, 16 years of age, employed in the hotel. A search disclosed that Worrow had disappeared. He has not been seen since. Two young negroes, friends of Worrow, were arrested on suspicion and were remanded in court.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

DENVER (Colo.) Sept. 6.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Radical changes are planned by the American Smelting and Refining Company in its western business, including the complete abolition of the general offices in Denver, the dismantling of the Grant smelter here, and the shutting down of the plant at Pueblo. Henceforth, the western interests of the trust will be concentrated in Mexico, where labor is cheaper and where the investments of Americans are increasing the output of ore at a rapid rate.

BULGARIA LEAVES WAR TO POWERS.

Council of Ministers Decides Upon a Policy of Neutrality.

If Turkey Challenges Her She Will Accept, but Otherwise the Macedonian Question Will Be Left to the Other Nations of Europe to Settle—Martial Law Will Be Proclaimed Upon the First Symptom of Disorder—Outrages by Mosiems Still Continuing.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

SOFIA (Bulgaria) Sept. 6.—[By Atlantic Cable.] According to reliable reports from Varna, at the recent Council of Ministers, presided over by Prince Ferdinand at the Palace of Euxinograd, it was resolved that Bulgaria should continue to maintain an attitude of the strictest neutrality in the Macedonian question, and further, that the most stringent measures should be adopted to prevent anything likely to cause a disturbance in Bulgaria's relations with Turkey.

The War Minister is reported to have spoken strongly in the Council against any thought of Bulgaria declaring war on Turkey; first on account of the enormous expenditure that such a war would involve, and secondly, because the great powers would never permit Bulgaria to reap the advantage if she were victorious.

Should Turkey attack Bulgaria, declared the Minister, the present army could hold the Turks in check for the first few days, while the entire Bulgarian army could be mobilized within three to twelve days. Bulgaria would never declare war, he added, but if war was declared against her, she would accept the challenge fearlessly.

As an evidence of Bulgaria's peaceful intentions, the Council decided that upon the first symptoms of disorder on the frontier, martial law would be proclaimed at Burgas, Kostendil, Philippopolis and Sofia. The Ministers expressed the opinion that the powers would soon reach the conviction that the Macedonian question could not be decided without their intervention.

SOFIA, Sept. 6.—[By Atlantic Cable.] The Autonomye publishes the names of fifty villages burned by the Turks in the following districts:

Resen, 30 villages; Kostur, 16; Brushevo, 4 and one monastery.

The Turks burned four villages in the district of Strushkopolis, and murdered the priest. The population fled to the mountains. The Turks have destroyed all the flour mills in the district of Resen and also every church. A fight is reported to have taken place at the village of Verbesko, in the district of Kumanove between a body of insurgents and a Turkish battalion. It lasted four hours, and the Turks lost heavily.

Reports have reached revolutionary headquarters here of atrocities by the Turks in the village of Velmosti in the district of Debre. The troops and Bashi-Bazouks are said to have surrounded the village, part of them entered and began plundering the houses and assaulting the women. The other soldiers remained outside, and killed those inhabitants who tried to escape. The Turks then set fire to the village in four places, burning twelve women and children. One child was hanged. Altogether sixty peasants were killed and their bodies were left lying in the streets.

BLOWING UP OF VASKAPU.

REPORTS BY SURVIVORS.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.—P.M.]

CONSTANTINOPLE, Sept. 6.—[By Atlantic Cable.] The survivors of the Hungarian steamer Vaskapu, which was destroyed in the Black Sea September 1, by explosions attributed to the Bulgarian revolutionists, while on her way from Varna, Bulgaria, to Constantinople, state that the explosions occurred on board the steamer at 4 o'clock last Tuesday morning. Two dynamite bombs were thrown by men supposed to have embarked at Varna, one in the stokehole and the other under the bridge. The whole bridge with the captain and two mates, was blown off, while the stokehole was wrecked and an apprentice killed.

The explosions were followed by an outbreak of fire in the forehold. Altogether, 150 persons lost their lives, but all the engineers and most of the passengers were saved. The crew behaved with great gallantry.

TURKISH OUTRAGES.

Private advices from Adrianople report that the troops in the Kirk Kilisseh district are treating the inhabitants with great rigor. Every Bulgarian village furnishing recruits to the insurgents has been bombarded and destroyed, the inhabitants being given barely time to escape. In the vilayet of Monastir equal severity is shown. One pasha told his troops that the booty belonged to them, and the honor to him. As a result the troops are pillaging even the villages which remain neutral.

There has been a heavy fall in Turkish securities during the past two days, on the unfounded rumor that the Turkish troops had crossed the Bulgarian frontier.

AMERICA AND THE TURKS.

LATTER ENTIRELY BLAMABLE.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.—P.M.]

CONSTANTINOPLE, Sept. 6.—United States Minister Leishman is not taking any steps regarding the attempt upon Vice-Consul Magelssen at Beirut, but is quietly awaiting developments on the part of the Porte.

Referring to the declarations made by Chekib Bey, the Turkish Minister at Washington, in an interview with him August 29, which have been cabled here, it is pointed out, in Constantinople, that the Porte would have obviated all the present disagreement between the United States and Turkey had it executed its engagement made last year, and therefore the Ottoman government is alone blamable for the present relations between the two countries.

It is also declared that the charges made by Chekib Bey against the American missionaries of inciting the Armenians against the Mussulmans are unfounded.

The interiors of most of the embassies here are guarded by armed soldiers from their respective guardships. The German Embassy, in the absence of its guardship, the Loreiei, which is cruising in the Black Sea, is guarded by Turkish soldiers.

WARLIKE FEELING GROWS.

OVERSEES RECRUITING.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.—P.M.]

LONDON, Sept. 7.—[By Atlantic Cable.] The special dispatches from Constantinople here this morning all concur concerning the gravity of the situation and that the warlike feeling has been increased by the fact that the Sultan last Friday reviewed and presented colors to new Hussar regiments recruiting from the tribes which produced the Ottoman dynasty, this being the first time that the Sultan has presided at such a ceremony. The Turkish papers are making patriotic appeals to the loyalty and devotion of the nation.

It is stated that an infernal machine was found in the baggage of a Bulgarian passenger on the Greek steamer Margarita, bound from Burgas to the Piraeus. The machine was thrown overboard and the passenger arrested. In consequence of the bomb outrage on the steamer Vaskapu, the Austrian Lloyd Steamship Company refuses to take passengers' baggage between Bulgaria and Constantinople.

A dispatch to the Daily Chronicle from Constantinople says the military party is clamoring for war, but the Sultan still hesitates. Nevertheless, troops are being massed along the frontier in readiness to take the field.

Advices from Salonica state that the authorities have received from Constantinople orders to prepare lists of the Armenians and Servians in Salonica, who will be subjected to the strictest police surveillance.

On the Sultan's fete day it transpires that the Manfas clubs, composed of the lowest elements of the Turkish population, had made an organized preparation to massacre the Christians, all the members being provided with a uniform pattern of cudgels, as was done at the time of the Armenian massacres in Constantinople. It is supposed that the "Manfas" were overawed by the military precautions, as nothing has happened.

It is announced from Gettinje, Montenegro, that the Montenegro Foreign Minister, M. Vukovitch, has started for Constantinople.

From Athens comes the news that the Greek government has been officially informed that the Grand Vizier has ordered an investigation of the Krushevo atrocities and the punishment of the officers concerned in them.

The Sofia correspondent of the Daily Telegraph sends an interview with M. Tartarscheff, a member of the Internal Macedonian Revolutionary Committee, in the course of which the latter declared that the advent of winter would by no means put an end to the struggle. It might modify it, but the Macedonians were in earnest, and would not be deterred by the weather. With reference to the atrocities attributed to the insurgents, M. Tartarscheff said they might not be excusable, but were certainly explicable by the Turkish savagery which provoked them.

A Varna dispatch to the Times says the inquiry shows that some members of a Macedonian band, with their baggage and ammunition, were aboard the steamer Vaskapu and this circumstance seems to indicate that the explosion was accidental.

The Daily Mail's correspondent at Monastir, telegraphing under Saturday's date, says:

"There is no doubt that a Turkish war of extermination is proceeding in the Okrida district. The massacres of a century ago are as nothing compared with those occurring daily in the vilayet of Monastir. I have obtained substantial evidence to prove that the Turkish nizams (Turkish regular troops,) are in most cases committing unheard-of atrocities, which are not solely the work of the Bashi Bazouks, as the authorities are seeking to prove. The plight of the survivors is terrible. Not daring to leave their houses, and subsisting on grass and water, they resemble people in the last stages of famine. The Turks are also losing heavily, judging from the number of injured arriving here."

Among the instances he gives in support of his statement, the correspondent relates that a priest's son in one village was flayed alive and kept in this horrible condition for several days, to the delight of his tormenters, until a merciful Turk shot him dead.

The Constantinople correspondent of the Standard telegraphs that the wedding story given out by the Vali of Beirut as an explanation of the outrage on United States Vice-Consul Magelssen is proved to be false, and the Vice-Consul's assailant is believed to be known. It is expected that the United States will peremptorily demand the dismissal of the Vali, who continues the correspondent, by common consent, is ruining Beirut. His disgrace would also strike a blow at the baleful influence of the Arab Izzet, a palace favorite, whose creature he is.

A letter from Beirut, dated August 28, describes the condition of affairs there under the present Vali as scandalous. It says: "Not only bribery and corruption are rampant in every branch of the administration, but a certain lawlessness is manifesting itself among the Moslem element which is sure to cause trouble in the future. The native Christians are oppressed, but they dare not complain, while the Europeans no longer enjoy the security which existed a few years ago. The house of the Italian Consul was lately rifled by burglars, and, August 23, the American Vice-Consul was fired at. Arrests were made, but it always happended that an innocent man was made to suffer for the crime."

KING PETER AT BELGRADE.

BELGRADE, Sept. 6.—King Peter and family have returned here, after an absence of twelve days at Nish. The papers report that a reconciliation between the opposing army factions is probable through the friendly influence of Prince Arsene Karageorgevitch, King Peter's brother. It is officially announced that an investigation is proceeding, but any punishment inflicted on the regicides and their coöperators in the conspiracy will be slight.

LOCOMOTIVE BOILER EXPLODES.

BLOOMINGTON (Ill.) Sept. 6.—While passing Greenview today at full speed, the boiler of a locomotive pulling a Kansas City fast freight train west bound, on the Chicago and Alton Railroad, exploded, killing Engineer Frank J. Upton, probably fatally injuring Fireman C. C. Keller and severely hurting Brakeman J. A. Montgomery. Many cars were thrown in a ditch and broken.

DEATH OF BOVIE.

ROME, Sept. 6.—The police forbade a public commemoration of the death of the Italian philosopher Bovie, which the extreme parties had arranged to hold today, as they believed that it was intended to convert it into a demonstration against the coming visit of the Czar to Rome. The extremists have decided to hold the commemoration next Sunday in spite of the police prohibition.

KENTUCKY DESPERADO KILLED.

MIDDLESBORO (Ky.) Sept. 6.—Marshal Gray shot and killed Lee Smith at Nicholson's mines late last night. Smith was from Bell county, and was known as a desperado. He had picked a quarrel with Gray, and later stabbed James Looney. Gray came to Looney's rescue and shot Smith. Gray then fled to the mountains.

COLOMBIA REPENTING.

Now Inching Along Toward Canal.

Senate Appoints a Commission to Prepare Bill Authorizing the Government to Negotiate.

Delegates from the Department of Panama Withdraw from the Congress at Bogota.

Intense Excitement Caused by a Report of United States Dealing With Isthmus.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.—P.M.]

BOGOTA (Colombia) Sept. 1.—[By South American Cable.] The Senate has appointed a commission to prepare a bill authorizing the government to negotiate a canal treaty without violating the constitution, but the government has not presented to Congress a message which is necessary, asking for reforms in the Constitution to meet the wishes of the United States regarding tribunals, the sovereign control of the canal strip and the hundred-year lease. The general feeling is favorable to a new treaty.

Señor Macaro, actual President of the Senate, expresses his admiration for the noble and sincere policy purgued by the United States, and hopes that the canal will be opened by them. He says he regrets that he was obliged to oppose the Hay-Herran treaty as being a violation of the laws and Constitution, but he will work strongly for a canal treaty satisfactory to both countries. Señor Abaldia, who has decided to support the canal treaty, has been appointed Governor of Panama. He will leave for his post tomorrow.

GOVERNMENT INSISTS.

BOGOTA, Sept. 6.—The government insists on Congress reconsidering the matter of the Panama Canal treaty. Gen. Herria has been appointed military commander of the Isthmus of Panama.

FRENCH COMPANY BUCKS.

WON'T PAY COLOMBIA MONEY.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Panama Canal Company has notified this government that it has rejected the efforts of the Colombian authorities to arrange a deal by which a part of the $40,000,000 to be paid to the company for its properties by the United States, if the canal treaty is ratified, will be handed over to Colombia. This course of the company meets with the approval of the United States government, which has insisted that any attempt to amend the canal treaty by the insertion of a provision requiring the Panama Company to divide with Colombia would be distasteful to the Washington administration. A notification to that effect was given to Colombia some time ago.

The statement that Colombia has been trying to get money out of the canal company, is regarded by some leading officials as confirming the news that the rejection of the canal agreement was a matter of dollars, and not of patriotism. Considerable indignation is expressed in official circles over this aspect of treaty negotiations. It is claimed by those who are familiar with what has been going on at Bogota that the treaty could have been ratified if there had been more money in sight. This government, however, declined to be a party to any such deal.

Sixteen days remain of the life of the treaty. While there is yet time for the Colombian Congress to reconsider its rejection, this government is not looking for any such happy result.

It is a mistake to suppose that should the treaty be ratified between now and the date of its expiration, September 22, it would fail nevertheless, because there would not be time enough to exchange ratifications. A physical exchange of copies now in Washington and those now in Bogota is not necessary. The formality of exchange can be concluded by telegraph, and the physical act be performed at some later day.

THOSE PANAMA DELEGATES.

HERRAN ASKS FOR NEWS.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6.—Anxious over the reports which have reached Washington that the delegates from the Department of Panama have withdrawn from the sessions of the Colombian Congress at Bogota, Dr. Thomas Herran, the acting Minister of Colombia here, today telegraphed to the Governor of Panama for information on the subject. Dr. Herran discredits the reports, as the advices from his government have given no intimation of such action.

The three Senators from Panama, with one exception—and he was bitterly opposed to the treaty—and the six members of the House of Representatives have assiduously worked for the ratification of the treaty. Their defection at this time, Dr. Herran realizes, would be a serious blow to the prospects for ratification. The one Panama Senator who has opposed the treaty has never lived in Panama, although being elected to the higher body from that department. The de-

DEATH AND BROKEN BONES.

Collision of Electric Cars Near Pelham, N. H.

Four Persons Killed and Nineteen Others Seriously Injured.

Motorman's Misunderstanding of Starter's Orders Given as Primary Cause.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.—P.M.]

PELHAM (N. H.) Sept. 6.—Through a head-on collision today of two electric cars, each running, it is said, at a rate of more than twenty miles an hour, four persons were killed and nineteen were so seriously injured that they are under physicians' care, and several of these are expected to die. As there were seventy passengers on the two cars, many others received cuts and minor wounds which did not prevent their going to their homes. The accident occurred on the line which runs through this town between Lowell and Nashua, and one of the cars, which was coming from the latter city, was nearly filled with people on their way to a summer resort.

The collision was due, according to the officials of the road, to a misunderstanding of the starter's orders by the motorman of the car bound from Nashua. The car starter endeavored to rectify this mistake by shutting off the power and trying to recall the Nashua-bound car, but it failed. The accident occurred at a curve on either side of which were long stretches of straight track. The dead, as reported up to 10 o'clock today, are:

CHARLES H. GILBERT, 60 years old, Nashua.

GABRIEL COLLETT, 25 years, Nashua.

GEORGE C. ANDREWS, 36, postmaster, Hudson, N. H.

SAMUEL MAYS, motorman on the Nashua car, Hudson.

The accident occurred on the Hudson, Pelham and Salem division of the New Hampshire Traction Company's electric railway.

The car from Nashua, carrying fifty-four passengers for Cannabi Lake, a summer resort, approached the curve a quarter of a mile west of Pelham center at terrific speed, accentuated by a down grade. The cars met on a curve, neither motorman seeing the approaching car until too late to avoid a collision. Neither was their time for the passengers to escape by jumping when the cars came together with a force that threw the west-bound car directly under the forward part of the other, crushing the top of the car down upon the passengers and pinioning those occupying the first three seats in the wreckage.

Near the accident were a number of campers, who at once rushed to the scene. With crowbars and other instruments the wrecked roofs of the cars were pried up and the imprisoned passengers released.

It is also rumored that the Sixth Servian Regiment, notorious for the part it played in the recent regicides, has been ordered to Nish.

SAVE THE "BALL CLAYY."

OUR FOREIGN WINES NEARLY ALL BOGUS.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Sept. 6.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Dr. Wiley, chemical expert of the United States government, as the result of official inquiry here, has satisfied himself that only a small proportion of the European wines sold in America are genuine. Wiley made the following statement:

"The American government will probably have to pursue practically the same policy as the British government under the Merchandise Marks Act, in order to secure immunity from fraud in the importation of foreign wines. The English markets, before that enactment, were flooded with French wines bearing false labels. The most competent wine expert in London told me that the United States was the dumping ground for all kinds of inferior, mislabeled wines that are unmarketable in Europe. These wines are not only usually of poor quality, but are sold under names which add immensely to their selling value.

"Investigations so far made tend to show that a large part of the wines coming to our ports under the name of the most valued brands are open to the gravest suspicion—in fact, the English expert gave his opinion that only a very small percentage is genuine. These wines are blended at Bordeaux and in other parts of Europe, and imitate to some extent the genuine products of the Chateaux.

"To stop these practices the United States will have to exercise the greatest vigilance through the aid of competent experts, stationed at the principal export ports, such as Bordeaux, Rheims and Mayence."

SUICIDE BLAKE A MISSING MURDERER.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 6.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] It developed today that the unknown man who committed suicide at Los Angeles, a few days ago, by shooting himself in the head with a revolver, was Milton M. Blake, formerly a resident of Milton, Fla. He has several brothers in Pensacola, Milton and Coriville, and they have arranged for the shipment of the body to Florida.

Blake quarreled with a man at Milton, several years ago, over an alligator which had been killed, which resulted in Blake killing the man. He fled to parts unknown, and afterward enlisted in the army, being sent to the Philippines. He served there for three years, and was discharged at a California port, and went to one of the ranches near Los Angeles.

CHARGE THEIR RUIN TO STANDARD OIL.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

DALLAS (Tex.) Sept. 6.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Fort Worth Telegram today prints a story on the authority of a prominent citizen of that city, whose name it withholds, to the effect that developments in an investigation at Beaumont fasten on the Standard company the destruction by salt water of many oil wells of independent companies. The Fort Worth man declares that the Standard Oil Company's conspirators used the pumping plant at the Gulf end of the Beaumont oil pipe line to pump salt water to Beaumont and into the wells they desired to wreck, in order to purchase the property. A large number of wells were thus secured by the Standard company after the salt water had ruined the independent owners.

The Beaumont end of the pipe line got out of order, a few days ago, and the wells that were flowing salt water at once began to flow oil. The astonished oil men investigated. They plugged up the Beaumont end of the pipe line, drove several miles in the country where they tapped the line, and salt water gushed out. The Fort Worth man says that $27,000 was subscribed by independent owners to push the investigation and to make arrests.

WASHINGTON.

HITCHCOCK'S REJOINDER.

Secretary Accuses President Garrett of Discourtesy.

Inspectors in Indian Affairs Are Entitled to a Hearing.

Interests of the Nation's Wards Have not Been Neglected by the Department.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.—P.M.]

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6.—Secretary Hitchcock today made public the correspondence between him and Philip C. Garrett of Philadelphia, president of the Indian Rights Association. The following letter from Secretary Hitchcock to Garrett was written August 29:

"I have received your letter, dated Axander, Mass., August 25, replying to mine of the 20th inst., and quote the first paragraph of the same, as follows: 'I am away from home, as I have been much of the summer, and do not recall exactly how the copies of Mr. Brosius's letter were sent out.'

"This in reply to my letter of the 20th to you, which was as follows: 'Upon my return to the city yesterday, I found your letter of the 13th inst., enclosing a letter from your Washington agent, S. M. Brosius, which last you state 'seems to me (you) to present grave irregularities on the part of officials appointed by the government which have a tendency to wrong the Indians—the very wards of the nation whom they are appointed to protect, and I take the liberty of submitting a copy of it to you, in order that if thought proper by you, the subject may be officially investigated.'

"Before replying more fully to your letter, as above acknowledged, I will thank you to kindly inform me whether or not the widespread publication in the press of the country, on or about the date of your letter to me, inclosing said letter, was authorized by yourself or any officer of your association.

"My purpose in thus addressing you was to ascertain whether or not you had authorized, or were aware of the fact that the letter of Mr. Brosius, enclosed with yours to me of the 13th, which I did not receive until my return to the city on the 19th, had been given widespread circulation throughout the country and before I had an opportunity to make any reply, inasmuch as such publication seems to me as being most discourteous under the circumstances. Hence my inquiry, which, as a matter of courtesy, I deemed due to yourself.

"I sincerely regret that you cannot now recall exactly how the copies of Mr. Brosius's letter were sent out.

"Returning now, in further reply to yours of the 13th inst., I note with pleasure your desire not to wish to exaggregate any of the evils in the administration of the Indian Bureau, and beg to state that the 'grave irregularities' on the part of officials appointed by the government, with which you seem to have been impressed by the report made to you by Mr. Brosius, have, for months past, had my personal attention, thus anticipating your courteous request that the subject may be officially investigated.

"This investigation has been made by me while on a visit to Indian Territory in May, as the result of which certain removals from office, by dismissal and enforced resignation, resulted, and upon my return here amended rules and regulations were prepared and issued July 16, the purpose of which was to more fully protect the Creek Indians in the matter of sales of their land by a proper notice and the requirement of sealed bids, by which such satisfactory results have been accomplished in the matter of the sale of inherited lands in other reservations throughout the country none of the original deeds for the sale of lands under the inherited act, nor lands in the Creek nation having been up to that time, nor since, approved.

"The interests of the Indians have not been neglected by the department, as is indirectly charged by Mr. Brosius, whose report I do not care to further discuss, because the accusations therein contained are to receive a full and rigid investigation.

"This department is and always has been, more than ready and willing to accept the assistance of your association in ascertaining and rectifying any irregularities. There are, however, proper and improper methods of procedure, and I think that it was not justifiable, but discourteous to me and unfair to them, to publish broadcast to the world the material gathered by Mr. Brosius, without further verification and without his having afforded to the officials whose reputation he attacked any opportunity to explain what seemed to him objectionable.

"The department does further maintain that its inspectors and other officials should have respect and confidence until a clear case is made against them, and that the present policy of dealing with the Indians is the result of accumulated experience, and is being pursued intelligently and vigorously with a view to the Indians' best interests.

"Your obedient servant,

[Signed] "E. A. HITCHCOCK,
"Secretary."

Garrett in his reply disclaims any intent of discourtesy, and says:

"The publication of the Brosius report was in accordance with the custom of the association to give to the press matters of importance in which the public is supposed to be interested."

Continuing, he says:

"We make no charge, up to this time, against any members of the Dawes Commission, nor, I believe, does our informant, Mr. Brosius, whose allegations you will observe are general in their character.

"I would like to make one comment on the closing passage in your letter, in which you say that 'inspectors and other officials should have respect and confidence until a clear case shall be made against them.'

"The inspector should be above suspicion, and where an inspector accepts the hospitality of the man he is sent to inspect, thus taking a bribe in his favor, or listens only or chiefly to one side, or favors his Congressional backer in any way, he is not above suspicion. I would not, therefore, put that sentence as you do, but would say that such officials should be accorded confidence so long as they are clearly honest and impartial in their investigations."

COAL COMPANIES DEFIANT.

WILL NOT FURNISH DATA.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The authorized statement given out at the Census Office that the coal companies have refused to furnish the government with information asked in regard to their operations is received as final or conclusive of the truth in the matter. It is unquestionably true that the coal companies, especially the Lehigh Valley, Reading, and Pennsylvania, have not filled in the schedules that were supplied to those companies, and their want of action is only to be taken as a refusal to make public the business of their corporations.

There is involved in this case the power of the general government to inquire into the business of corporations engaged under relations which are in the nature of a combination and in restraint of trade. The question has arisen in several cases heretofore, and there is now pending in the Federal courts in a case brought by Representative-elect Hearst one that is on all fours with this, arising in the work of the Census Office.

In that case the authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission was defied by the coal companies, and the right of the companies to refuse to disclose their business concerns to the government commission was sustained in the court of first instance, and will be argued before the Supreme Court early in the October term, the number having been advanced on the calendar because of the importance of the principles involved to the business interests of the country, both from the point of view of the capitalist and also of the consumer of coal.

The companies, in declining to furnish to the Census Office the information asked by the schedules sent to them have undoubtedly rested upon their present right, under the decision of the court, and expect to maintain their present attitude until the whole question shall have been passed on finally by the United States Supreme Court.

CASE OF FALSE VOUCHERS.

INDICTMENTS IN OKLAHOMA.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.—P.M.]

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6.—A telegram to Secretary Hitchcock from United States District Attorney Horace Speed of Oklahoma says the United States grand jury has found three indictments against Contractor Stokes and three county commissioners for Kiowa county for making false vouchers and false certificates for the purpose of defrauding the government in connection with the building of bridges.

Stokes is under arrest, and his bond has been fixed at $4500. The three indicted county commissioners, it is said, have fled the country. This action has been taken at the instance of Secretary Hitchcock as the result of an investigation instituted by him several months ago, which revealed the fact that gross frauds had been practiced in Oklahoma in connection with contracts for bridges, roads and buildings in the three counties opened for settlement two years ago.

Secretary Hitchcock held up all bills until he could have an investigation made, and the present indictments are the result. Other arrests are expected to follow.

Shocking Accident on Mexican Central—Railway Shops Moving—Monterey Isolated Because of Yellow Fever. Officials Dismissed by President for Gambling.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CITY OF MEXICO (Mex.) Sept. 6.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Wednesday morning there was a shocking accident on the Mexican National Railroad near this city. Locomotive No. 70 had been repaired, but imperfectly, at the railroad shops. It was assigned the task of drawing the local to San Miguel. Hardly had the train reached Santa Julia, a suburb of the city, when some bolts loosened, and the boiler exploded. Engineer Jesus Sanchez, jumped after reversing just in time to save his own life. Fireman Gregorio Gomez was cooked to death, as was also a tramp, who was stealing a ride behind the tender.

Gomez had a singular premonition of accident and death, and before the train started had half playfully scratched "dead" on the locomotive front.

SHOT HIS FRIEND.

A. A. McAlpin, bookkeeper and cashier of Bell and Semmes, railroad contractors, was accidentally shot last Tuesday by Manuel Flores, timekeeper of the same firm, at Yermo, Chihuahua, where the firm is completing a contract. The men were devoted friends. McAlpin died soon after and was taken to Jiminez for interment. The deceased was a Scotchman, and came to Mexico first as stenographer and private secretary to Lewis Kingman, chief engineer of the Mexican Central, six months ago accepting the position at Yermo. Flores has been for two years employed by the firm and is regarded as trustworthy.

The shooting was regarded as accidental, but an inquest was ordered.

STREET RAILWAY FRANCHISE.

Wednesday, a group of Americans acquired an important tram line franchise in this city, which will prove a powerful competitor for the existing street-car line, controlled by an English company. The two lines taken over are the Mexican Traction Company of Ferrocarril de Banos and the Linea de Circunvelacion, the latter held by John J. Moylan and associates. The former line at present a mule tram running from the eastern edge of the city to Pano Baths, Paseo, will be changed to electric traction, and run from the depot, San Lazaro Inter-Oceanic Railway to Tacubaya, connecting with the Mexican National Railroad, at the latter town. The total run of twelve miles through the heart of this city will be operated by the overhead trolley. The price paid was 212,000 pesos. Actual delivery was made Wednesday by the Lic Jimenez de La Cuesta, in behalf of the estate of the late Romualdo Zamora y Duque to M. R. McAdoo, president of the Mexican Traction Company. Pedro Mendez, is secretary-treasurer, B. Schoyer, president and attorney and G. C. Pierce general-superintendent. Pierce will conduct the operation of the new Banos line, assuming charge of the same yesterday. The line well be broad guage. Same fares will be collected as now obtaining in this capital, 6 cents local, and 15 cents to Tacubaya.

McAdoo went to New York today and will return to this city October 1, with his family.

The Circunvelacion system covers a franchise of sixty miles, starting from the Plaza fronting the Department of Public Works, running westerly to Guerrero and Tacubaya suburbs, making connection with Mexican Central and Mexican railways, thence southward to Coyoacan, with branches to the American additions of Paseo from Coyoacan, returning northward to the point of starting, thus making a complete circuit of the capital and effecting connections with every railroad system entering Mexico by broad-gauge tracks with forty and fifty-foot cars and the finest electrical equipment possible under American genius.

Practically no work had been done by the concessionaires who sold out to the New Yorkers mentioned.

The new company also includes W. G. McAdoo, president of the New York and New Jersey Railroad Company, now building two tunnels for tram lines under the North River; James B. Oliver, president of the Oliver Iron and Steel Company, Pittsburgh; James H. Park, a capitalist of the same city; Frank B. Smith, president of the Crucible Steel Company, and Reuben Miller and Julius Bieles, capitalists of Pittsburgh. Their grants from the Federal government, completely perfected, convey rights to build in streets parallel with existing street-car lines and even run over said lines, under certain conditions mutually agreeable, thus dissolving the monopoly of thirty years.

RAILWAY SHOPS MOVING.

Next week the machinery and machine shops of the Mexican Central in this city commence to move to new shops at Aguas Calientes, two cars leaving Tuesday, the entire transfer to be made within five months. Aguas Calientes was selected on account of water power and because nearer the center line, also being the junction branch to Port Tampico.

MONTEREY ISOLATED.

The government has received a petition from the Monterey people asking a suspension of traffic on the Central's line to Port Tampico, owing to the prevalence of yellow fever at that port, but the government, acting on the advice of the Board of Health, refused to grant the request, and even ordered the State government of Nuevo Leon, of which Monterey is the capital, to lift the quarantine against Tampico. The fever is steadily decreasing at the port. Pending the revocation of quarantine regulations of Texas against Monterey, through trains from Mexico to Laredo do not stop at Monterey, the railroad company having obtained from the Federal government the right to cut off Monterey so as to prevent the quarantine of through passengers at the border. Thus the second commercial city of the republic, with 70,000 inhabitants and with a larger percentage of Americans than any city in Mexico, is cut off from the world. The nearest connections to Monterey by local trains are Saltillo, 108 kilometers south, and Lampasas, 150 kilometers north.

SERRANO'S VACATION.

Rafael H. Serrano, Mexican Consul of St. Louis, Mo., arrived Wednesday via the Mexican Central, having stopped at Guadalajara a few days. He will spend the rest of his leave of absence in this city, and return next month with his family to his post of duty.

GAMBLERS PUNISHED.

A sensation has been caused by the action of the Federal government over the signature of President Diaz in ordering the instant dismissal on Wednesday of four employés of the General Tax Office of the Federal District surprised by the police playing dice for drinks in a saloon. The young men, on reaching the office, were handed the salary due and dismissed. The government is determined to make effective the recent order of Gov. Landa y Escandon, prohibiting gambling even in clubs and anywhere by military or civic employés.

CLAYTON SICK.

Ambassador Powell Clayton has been ill in bed since his return from the United States, suffering from chronic stomach trouble. Fenton R. McCreery, first secretary of the American embassy, leaves next week for a three months' vacation trip to Europe, provided the Ambassador's health permits.

GEN. REYES THANKED.

The German government sent a vote of thanks to Gen. Bernardo Reyes, Governor of the State of Nuevo Leon, for his services as arbiter between the German glass blowers of Monterey and their employés. The Kaiser also conveys thanks to Herr Von Hoeckher, German Chargé d'Affaires in this capital, and Consul Burchard of Monterey (American Consul) in the same connection.

Mrs. D. B. Wells, field secretary of the Woman's Presbyterian Board of Missions of Chicago, arrived Thursday after visiting work in Monterey, Saltillo and San Luis Potosi. She will remain here three weeks as a guest of this mission and Coyoacan.

PITTSBURGH, Sept. 6.—A deputation of Pittsburgh Salvationists, under the leadership of Staff Captain White, will leave Wednesday for the feud district of Kentucky, and undertake the work of reforming the feudists. The objective point will be Breathitt county.

The reception which the members of the army will receive in the counties to be invaded is a matter of grave doubt to many interested in the work, but those who are going seem to have no fear of the manner in which they will be treated.

HOLY FATHER MASTERS VATICAN'S MECHANISM.

WILL NOT APPOINT SECRETARY OF STATE JUST YET.

His Choice Will be an Italian, to Accord With Ancient Policy—Pope Leo's Officials Will be Retained Until Elevated by Promotions—French Premier Suppresses a Salary.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.—P.M.]

ROME, Sept. 6.—[By Atlantic Cable.] With reference to the report that Cardinal Moran of Sydney, N. S. W., has been offered the post of Papal Secretary of State, it can be said that Pius X has taken no decision regarding the appointment of a State Secretary.

A cardinal who is on the best terms with the Pontiff, having been one of his warmest electors, said today to the Associated Press correspondent:

"The Holy Father decides to become master of the whole mechanism of the Vatican before appointing a Secretary of State. Meanwhile, all officials employed by Pope Leo XIII have been retained, as none better than they could help the new Pontiff in carrying out his purpose. The new Secretary of State will gradually replace them. But their removal will not be a punishment. On the contrary, they will be rewarded for their services by promotion.

"The new Secretary of State will choose men entirely trusted by him, and who will be capable of collaborating with him in the new direction of the Vatican's policy.

The new secretary, however, is almost sure to be an Italian, as that has been the tradition for centuries. Cardinal Moran, notwithstanding his ability, his liberal turn of mind and his exact acquaintance with modern problems, has no more chance than any other foreigner. This is why Mgr. Merry Del. Val, who has often been spoken of for the position, is unlikely to be chosen, he being a Spaniard. Besides his appointment, even if made after being appointed a cardinal, might be considered as an offense to the Sacred College, as it would imply that among its present members there is none worthy to occupy the position."

Bishop Hendrick of Cebu, P. I., and Mgr. Hendrick, the bishop's brother, left this morning for Venice.

BISHOP'S SALARY SUPPRESSED.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.—P.M.]

PARIS, Sept. 6.—Premier Combes has suppressed the salary of Bishop Andrieu of Marseilles because of a violently-worded circular issued by the bishop to the clergy of his diocese, denouncing the authorities, and also on account of a recent demonstration in the cathedral at Marseilles on the occasion of a visit from the bishop of Nancy, whose salary had been previously suppressed by the government.

SHOULD END THE MASSACRES.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.—P.M.]

ROME, Sept. 6.—Pius X has represented to the Austrian Emperor the advisability, especially on the part of the Catholic powers, of coming to an agreement as to the best way to stop the massacres in Macedonia.

Several cardinals have expressed the opinion that the Pontiff should publicly denounce the situation in Macedonia to the civilized world, without distinction of religion, calling upon all the powers to take common action on humanitarian grounds.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.—P.M.]

WATSONVILLE, Sept. 6.—Watsonville is in the throes of a sensation over the cause of the death of Mrs. Sara Scales Green, an aunt of Bill Nye, the noted humorist. Mrs. Green's death was supposed to have been caused by accidental asphyxiation. District Attorney Benjamin K. Knight and Sheriff Trafton have been in town making an investigation of the matter. They were closeted with R. Green, husband of the deceased, and his statement regarding her death was given by the official court reporter. District Attorney Knight stated that he had received information that the death of Mrs. Green was not accidental; suspicious incidents regarding her death have been called to their attention and warrants of arrest will be issued.

METHODIST CHURCH SCANDAL.

CLAIMS TO HELP HAMMOND.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 6.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Rev. George P. Eaton, of Eaton & Mains, head of the Methodist Book Concern in New York, is here to attend the conference of California Methodists at Pacific Grove, where the Hammond case will be discussed. Rev. John D. Hammond, agent for the Book Concern at San Francisco for many years, will not to secure election as delegate to the quadrennial conference, next year in Los Angeles. Several prominent California preachers who were influential in removing him as the Book Concern agent, are determined he shall not succeed, as they claim that an election would show that the church pardons his shortage of funds. Mains and Mains refused to talk of the Hammond case, but admitted that it would be an investigation of the charges against Hammond, about whose books accounts and his stewardship of the Chinese mission. It is known that Dr. Mains has come out from New York to help Hammond, as both he and Dr. Homer Easton are warm friends of the accused clergyman. Hammond is accused of having appropriated $60,000 of the Book Concern funds, for which he made no accounting, and to have given no vouchers for the expenditure of $10,000 a year on the Chinese mission in this city. Easton says it could not cost more than $4 a year to run this mission.

PACIFIC COAST SALMON.

PACK 1,000,000 CASES LESS.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.—P.M.]

PORTLAND (Or.) Sept. 6.—The Pacific Coast pack of salmon this year is 1,000,000 cases smaller, than it was last year, and 2,000,000 cases short of the pack in 1901. This year no stocks are carried over, and the new supply will amount to about three million cases.

The big shortage in Columbia River pack, an almost total failure of sockeyes in Puget Sound and in British Columbia, as well as a deficit of 500,000 cases in Alaska salmon, are responsible for the small size of the pack.

Reardon on North Second street, at 4 o'clock this morning, consumed that structure, together with two hacks, a fine buggy and three valuable horses. The flames spread to King's Conservatory of Music adjoining, which was damaged to the amount of $2000, covered by insurance. Reardon's loss is $2500, with light insurance. The origin is unknown.

INDIAN FATHER'S HEROISM.

KILLS HIS SUFFERING SON.
[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.—P.M.]

CARSON (Nev.) Sept. 6.—A strange story of murder and suicide comes from Schurz, a hamlet on the line of the Carson and Colorado River. An aged Indian named George Sam, unable to witness the sufferings of his young son, killed the lad with a shotgun and then, placing the muzzle of the gun at his own head, discharged the remaining barrel.

KILLED FARMER MOORE.

MODESTO MILKMAN CONFESSES.
[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.—P.M.]

MODESTO, Sept. 6.—W. S. Moore, a well-known farmer living twelve miles south of this city, was found dead in the road leading from Modesto to his home, shortly after daylight this morning. Two bullet holes were found in his body.

Tracks in the road showed that Moore was driving along the road, and that another rig passed his team on his right side. Where the passing occurred, Moore had fallen from his buggy seat to the road, had risen and walked nine steps before he fell onto his face.

The body was near the house of L. F. Reeves and soon after the shooting, Reeves, in his regular trip in gathering cream to be taken to the Modesto creamery, drove up to the house of Charles Swett. Swett and his wife had heard shots, and asked Reeves what he had been shooting at. Reeves answered "jackrabbit." Later he drove home and told his boy to go to the house of O. H. Muncy and tell him that a dead man was found in the road. Reeves drove to town and was nearly home again when Constable Davis placed him under arrest. Reeves admitted that he and Moore had quarreled during the past few months and he had threatened Moore. Later, when confronted with evidence, he acknowledged that he had shot Moore, claiming that it was in self-defense, and that Moore had attempted to draw a gun when the teams met. A search failed to show that Moore had been armed.

Moore leaves a widow and two-year-old son, while Reeves has a family of a wife and nine children.

ATTACK ON MAYOR.

Tuscola (Ill.) Chief Executive Struck With Paving Bricks in Hands of Two Men Concealed in His Barn.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.—P.M.]

TUSCOLA (Ill.) Sept. 6.—Two men attempted to assassinate Mayor Charles L. McMasters last night as he was entering his barn to put up his horse after a drive. The men were concealed in the barn and attacked Mayor McMasters with paving bricks, felling him twice with blows on the head. One blow was struck from behind. The Mayor fought off the assailants, and they fled.

YELLOW FEVER FUND.

MONTEREY(Mex.) Sept. 6.—A fund for the yellow fever sufferers of Linares, where the disease is epidemic, has been started by prominent citizens of this city. Business has been partially suspended, and those who are not afflicted with the fatal disease are idle, though not in direct need as yet. Scores of fever cases have been reported, and among the afflicted are the Mayor and his secretary.

A representative of the Texas health authorities is expected to arrive here next Tuesday to supervise the disinfecting of the city and to make another thorough investigation, after which, if the quarantine measures established by the Monterey authorities against Linares, and other infected points are found to be efficacious, the quarantine aginst Monterey will be lifted.

LABOR.

EFFECTS OF STRIKE.

Southern Pacific Morgan Line of Steamers Unable to Dock at New Orleans Put to Sea With Precious Freight.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 6.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Southern Pacific Morgan line of steamers has incurred the ire of New Orleans merchants in a unique way, and it promises to lead to some damage suits. Owing to the strike of the Morgan dock workers, the steamers have been unable to discharge all their cargo and get away on time. The Comus, from New York, brought a big cargo of freight, much of which was almost as precious as perishable. Over one-third official credits are floating up and down the ocean, unable to get ashore.

Driven to action, a body of merchants met at the Board of Trade rooms today and took up the trouble. After a conference they agreed that the labor troubles were so serious that they would hold off a few days. The steamship Excelsior had to sail back to Havana with 3000 bags of sugar consigned to the trust sealed up in her hold. The United States government officials went to the wharf and sealed the hold.

QUIET AT CRIPPLE CREEK.

CONFERENCE OF MINE OWNERS.

Bell and held a conference. Brig.-Gen. Chase was also in attendance. The subject of the conference was not made public, but it is generally believed that it had reference to the opening of the mines for work. It is believed that an attempt will be made to renew operations next Tuesday.

The roster of the camp shows something over 600 men on duty. The Meeker troop is composed entirely of cowboys.

A meeting of the Trades Assembly was called for tonight. It is stated that restaurant employés will be ordered to refuse to serve soldiers.

An open-air mass meeting, attended by several hundred persons, was held this afternoon, at which resolutions protesting against the presence of troops in the camp were adopted.

Already prospectors have reached here and are offering big prices for leases on adjacent territory. Many foreign companies recently held local territory leases, but allowed them to expire, believing the land worthless.

BLACK DIAMONDS MAKE BLACK CLOUDS.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Sept. 6.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Published figures showing the enormous demand for coal by the governments of England, Russia and Turkey have made the war cloud look bigger and blacker than ever. The British admiralty has asked for quotations for 1,000,000 tons of steam coal, to be put in depot at various British stations, Gibraltar and Malta being the two principal places. One English firm alone has just contracted to supply 250,000 tons to Russian agents. This contract is still being executed under urgent request for speedy delivery. Of the total, about 100,000 tons still remain to be delivered.

Turkish agents are also buying extensively, and asking for further quotations. The 1,000,000 tons required by the British admiralty is for the four months ending December, and is said by a London merchant to be twice the quantity usually asked for.

fection of the Panama delegate, it is suggested here, might be in the nature of a protest over the attitude of the opposition to the treaty with the possibility of secession from the national government.

Dr. Herran still clings to the hope that a way will be found whereby the present treaty will be ratified. He lays much stress on the possibility that the Senate may agree to a measure to be subsequently passed by the House where there is said to be a majority for the treaty, giving President Marroquin authority to negotiate directly an instrument along the lines of the present treaty. President Marroquin is known to be heartily in favor of the treaty as it is now drawn, and if he were fully authorized to do so, the confident belief of Dr. Herran is that the treaty would be ratified.

The interruption to cable communication with Bogota has been a source of irritation alike to the State Department and to the Colombian legation officials. It was developed that United States Minister Beaupre at Bogota failed to receive dispatches sent to him by the State Department between July 24 and August 15. At this time, when the United States government is anxious to communicate frequently with Mr. Beaupre, this interruption is particularly annoying, and Dr. Herran has asked the proper officials in Colombia to investigate the cause therefor.

NEWS FROM THE ISTHMUS.

POLITICS BREWING HOTLY.
[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

PANAMA, Sept. 6.—[By Central American Cable.] Gen. Hernandez, ex-President of Panama, who was spoken of some time ago as a possible Presidential candidate, has been offered a European legation. It is said the government is anxious to send him from the country and thus keep him out of the Presidential contest.

Bogota advices say a stormy session was recently held in the House of Representatives when the scandalous proceedings arising out of the erratic conduct of Gen Cobos, July 25, came up for discussion. The representative for the Department of Panama complained bitterly that the Isthmus was being exploited as a colony, and that all the high officials were appointed from other departments, Ricardo Arango being the only Governor appointed from the Isthmus since 1885.

It is believed here that it was the fear of a secession movement which led to the appointment of Señor Obaldia as Governor of Panama, with, it is said, power to negotiate on the canal question.

Gen. Sarria, who has been appointed military Governor of Panama, is an Isthmian at heart, having lived twenty years in Panama.

UNCLE SAM AND PANAMA.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.—P.M.]

BOGOTA, Sept. 6.—Intense excitement has been produced here by a cablegram reporting the probability of the United States dealing directly with Panama in the canal matter. Senator Obaldia, who has been appointed Governor of Panama, left today for his post. He will take with him a canal plan, which, it is said, will satisfy all. Representative Fabrega also left for Panama.

PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

BOGOTA, Sept. 6.—Congress has enacted only five laws, and it is reported that the sessoins will soon be closed. It is probable that the Presidential candidates will be Gen. Rafael Reyes, the Vice-President, and José Manuel Marroquin, the acting President.

No Room for the Band.

Former President Cleveland tells with great glee of an experience he had when he was Governor of New York State.

There was a public meeting at one of the theaters to which the Governor and his staff were invited. The staff put on their most gorgeous uniforms. There were fifteen or sixteen of them, and they were resplendent in gold lace and cord.

When the party reached the theater entrance they found so many people there that somebody suggested they should go around and enter by the stage door.

They encountered a stolid stage doorkeeper who had been at his post for years and was used to the wiles of people who want to get behind the scenes.

"Can't get in here," he said gruffly.

"But," said Mr. Cleveland, "I am the Governor."

The doorkeeper looked the Governor over carefully. Apparently he recognized him, for he said: "All right, Governor, you can go in."

Then he waved his hand at the gaudy staff and announced: "The hand must go around the other way."—[Saturday Evening Post.

COL. GRIFFITH BREAKS DOWN AND WEEPS.

Friend's Expression of Sympathy too Much for His Nerves.

Wife He Is Charged With Having Shot Still in Precarious Condition—Reported That Defense Will be That She Shot Herself in an Attempt at Suicide—Examination of the Hotel Rooms.

Col. Griffith J. Griffith broke down and cried yesterday when offered sympathy by a friend. He spent the day at the residence of Dr. E. M. Griffith, Sixteenth and Valencia streets, and the day proved the hardest one for him since the shooting of Mrs. Griffith Thursday night.

"Col. Griffith is suffering from extreme nervousness, and has reached that point where the reaction from the nervous strain is setting in," said Dr. Griffith yesterday afternoon.

A friend of the Colonel's called at the house to extend his sympathy, and found him lying on a couch on the front porch, with a light blanket thrown over him. Griffith arose and extended his hand with his usual cordiality, but the hand was hot and feverish and lacked the energetic grip which generally accompanies his hand clasp.

"I have but a moment to stay, Col. Griffith," said the friend, "but I want to know how you are getting on and see if there is anything I can do for you. No man was ever placed in a more terrible position, and I feel for you. No matter whether you shot your wife or not, no man can ever make me believe that you did so with malice aforethought. You have my sympathy, and I pity you from the bottom of my heart."

Such sympathy proved too much for Col. Griffith, and this strong man, who was never before known to lose his composure, broke down. His face twitched as he tried to answer, and the cords in the back of his neck moved up and down, the veins on his forehead swelled, and his eyes filled with tears. He cried like a child. He was apparently suffering agony, and, placing his hand over his eyes, he said in broken words: "I am very tired. I am feverish. I do not feel well," and he slowly turned and entered the house, assisted by Dr. Griffith.

Each day interest in the shooting of Mrs. Griffith J. Griffith at the Hotel Arcadia, Santa Monica, Thursday evening, apparently heightens.

The injured woman lies at the California Hospital, still in a precarious condition, the doctors stating that at any time within the week meningitis may set in, in which event death would ensue.

Col. Griffith has given $15,000 bond for his appearance to answer to the charge of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill, and if his wife should die, the charge would in all probability be changed to "murder."

That this case may be the most dramatic ever brought to trial in Los Angeles goes without saying. The defendant, a citizen of prominence, who has been a public benefactor on several occasions, and who is now holding a public office as a Park Commissioner, is in position to fight to the limit. On the other hand the sentiment of the relatives of Mrs. Griffith is daily becoming more bitter, and they will leave no stone unturned in making a strong prosecution.

As far as can be learned Judge Charles Silent will be the chief counsel for the defense. He stated yesterday afternoon that his assistants have not been decided upon.

"Will the defense claim that the discharge of the revolver was accidental?" he was asked yesterday.

"We have not fully decided upon what course the defense will pursue, and if we had it would not be a matter for publication," he answered.

District Attorney Fredericks will lead the prosecution, assisted, in all probability, by Isidore B. Dockweiler. Until it comes to trial, Chief Deputy W. P. James will handle the case. It is understood that an effort has been made to procure the services of Earl Rogers, Esq., for the prosecution. Rogers is in New York City and will not return for several days.

Contrary to the general opinion that the defense will make a claim of accident, it is said on well-grounded authority that it will claim that Mrs. Griffith was shot by her own act in an attempt to commit suicide. Col. Griffith, one of his friends says, is not a man who would ever consent to the insanity plea, notwithstanding the report that his wife and relatives take that view of the matter and would be glad to have such a verdict rendered by the jury.

"We are not persecuting Col. Griffith," said I. B. Dockweiler "we simply feel that he should be incarcerated, and if the jury delivers a verdict of insanity we will be pleased that he may have the comforts of a private asylum, but if it delivers a verdict of attempt to murder, we believe that he should go to jail. And lastly, if the defense endeavors to prove that 'Tiny' (Mrs. Griffith) attempted to commit suicide, in the event of her death within the next week I hope that he will hang."

Col. Griffith has made the claim from the first that he was attempting to defend his wife when he made the statement at Santa Monica and afterward that the shooting was accidental. Speaking of this yesterday afternoon, William H. Knight, Griffith's secretary, said: "We will be able to prove that all statements which Col. Griffith made on the night of the shooting were made to defend his wife. He has not thought of himself in this matter at all until forced to do so by his arrest. The arrest was as unexpected to him as the shooting was, and he was more surprised that his wife should make her accusation of attempted murder than he was that she should shoot herself."

"You say all remarks were made to defend his wife. To defend his wife from what?"

"That is a question which only Col. Griffith's attorney, Judge Silent, can answer," said Mr. Knight.

"Do you mean that Col. Griffith claims that his wife attempted to commit suicide?"

"I do not claim anything. You must see Judge Silent, he is the only man who can give any information. I am very busy, very busy, overburdened with work. Good day. Good day." and he hastily closed the door and locked it.

It is further understood that the defense will go back in the history of the family and attempt to prove that at the time of the death of Briswalter from blood poisoning, Mrs. Griffith threatened to take her life. That suicide has been in her mind for many years.

The attorneys for the prosecution claim Col. Griffith has practically convicted himself out of his own mouth, and scout the idea that he was speaking in defense of his wife.

In any event the case will attract more attention than any ever tried in this city.

SCENE OF SHOOTING.
OFFICIAL EXAMINATION.

Chief Deputy District Attorney William P. James, accompanied by a stenographer, went to Santa Monica yesterday to accumulate evidence. Statements were taken from Mr. Wright, proprietor of the Hotel Arcadia; from several attachés, such as the bell boys, the chambermaid and the elevator man, and from guests staying at the place at the time the shooting occurred.

The rooms occupied by the Griffiths were Nos. 104 and 105, connecting, and they were carefully measured by the acting district attorney. No. 105 is the front room, and was occupied by Col. Griffith. Mrs. Griffith and her son slept in the other, the latter occupying a cot. As you stand in the doorway [illegible] No. 104, which opens into her sister, Mrs. Whipple, and for the doctor, and the son went to the office of the hotel, loked up the telephone numbers, and waited while the clerk did the telephoning for him."

The statements taken yesterday from the occupants of the Arcadia were not under oath, but merely interviews. The sworn statements are to be taken later.

"The County Surveyor is going to Santa Monica sometime within the next few days and make detailed drawings of the apartments, giving full and accurate dimensions. The statements taken can not be made public at this time, but you may say that all evidence tended to support the statement of the shooting made by Mrs. Griffith, and that the case seems to be very clearly attempted murder on the part of Col. Griffith," said Mr. James.

PATIENT'S CONDITION.
PHYSICIANS SATISFIED.

Upon leaving their patient for the night at 9 o'clock, Drs. Moore and Lasher were well satisfied with her condition.

"Mrs. Griffith is doing fully as well as could be expected, and her recovery is more probable than ever. She should spend a good night in sleep," said Dr. Moore on leaving.

Mrs. Griffith has not yet been informed of the arrest of her husband, and of his release on bail. She has been instructed to speak as little as possible, and no one saw her today but her sister, Mrs. Whipple, and myself," said Isidore B. Dockweiler. "There is no further occasion for her to speak at length, and we hope there will be none, but if matters should turn for the worst, arrangements have been made to take a dying statement on a few moments' notice. Her pulse is still low and she suffers much pain from her wound in the head, and her remaining eye is beginning to trouble her, but it is not thought that she will lose the sight of it out of sympathy, as was at first feared. Her fractures of the shoulder are of the 'worst kind, but are doing very well."

Many persons called during the day at the hospital to make inquiries concerning the condition of Mrs. Griffith. Her case has deeply impressed the attendants at the hospital, where there is expressed a unity of sympathy and a hope for her speedy recovery.

King Edward's Newest Friend.

If the word of King Edward may be accepted as criterion, Lady Mar and Kellie is the prettiest woman in England. He says so, and the Queen concurs. The King pair had Lady Mar and Kellie in their box at the races recently, and she was looked upon with envy by other women of the King's set. She is a Scot. The lands of Mar and Kellie were bestowed upon her husband's ancestor in 1221. Since then these lands have been in litigation. At the races Lady Mar and Kellie wore a simple frock of heliotrope crepe. At the neck and waist line there were flashes of cerise velvet. Her plumed toque was of the same color scheme. Her success seems all the greater because her family never before has been conspicuous at court.—[New York Press.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION SAFEGUARDS REPUBLIC.

BISHOP CONATY DISCUSSES THE CHURCH SCHOOL SYSTEM.

Says Instruction Without Religious Teaching Proved Failure—Feast of St. Vibiana, Patroness of Diocese of Monterey and Los Angeles, Observed.

The Feast of St. Vibiana, patroness of the diocese of Monterery and Los Angeles and titular of the cathedral, was observed yesterday. At each of the services at St. Vibiana's Cathedral there were very large congregations; and yesterday morning there was a solemn pontifical mass celebrated by Rt. Rev. Bishop Conaty.

Very Rev. P. Harnett, V.G., was arch priest; Revs. Clement Molony and George Donahoe were the deacons of honor; Rev. Joseph Kaiser was the deacon of the mass; Rev. William Quinlan was subdeacon, and Rev. D. W. J. Murphy, master of ceremonies. Present in the sanctuary was Rev. Father Fallon, pastor of the Church of St. Patrick, New Orleans, who is spending a few days at the Episcopal residence here.

The altars were beautifully decorated, and during the entire day the curtain was withdrawn from the crypt back of the main altar, and the relics of St. Vibiana, which were brought here from the Catacombs, were exposed to view. The sermon on the life of the saint was delivered by Rev. D. W. J. Murphy.

Last night there was a solemn pontifical vesper service, and Bishop Conaty preached a sermon on "Christian Education." He said, in part:

"The Catholic church has a message as an educational force, and the establishment of schools under her auspices has been a most important part of her work in spreading the gospel of Jesus Christ among the people.

"If we would know her educational work from the school idea we must read the history of the world, on every page of which we will find her efforts. The early Christian schools, the monastic system, the episcopal seminaries, the universities, tell the story of an evolution which has civilized the world.

"Roman civilization was Christianized by her; the barbarians were changed into the European nations; Greek philosophy was supernaturalized, and the university system of the Middle Ages was a result of her influence. She has preserved for the world the literature of the ancients, and organized the splendid system of an education, which, while giving the best that the old civilization contained, gave with it the blessings of Christianity. In this age of universal education she remains the one great church factor standing for the ideals of Christianity, and insisting that Christ is greater than Socrates and Aristotle and Plato and Cicero, and the whole scheme of pagan culture, and that Christ and His doctrines of life are as necessary to the twentieth as to the first century. There is a certain drift toward the purely materialistic, the merely natural or intellectual alone; it aims at an independence of all positive religious thought, and the result must be a return to paganism, or at least a development of natural religion which is a religion without Christ, and consequently a destruction of Christianity as taught by Christ and His apostles.

"It is always interesting to the student of history to follow the history of the church in its educational, as well as in its religious work. From the cathedral school it passed to the monastic development, until in the Middle Ages, when there arose in the church a system of universities dotting the land with their centers of learning, higher schools of general culture." Bishop Conaty spoke of this intellectual evolution as seen in the history of the world. He then said: "Fifty years ago it was asserted that general education would remedy all existing evils, and lessen, if not abolish, crime. If we examine results, I am afraid that we will find neither promise fulfilled. Intellectual crime—if such a term may be used—has certainly increased. Refinement in crime is in evidence on all sides. Where is the fault? I feel satisfied that it must be placed to the credit of a one-sided education; the evil is in the divorce of education from positive religion. Withdraw relegion with its precepts as an essential factor in education, and you will have, as a result, in many cases, mental refinement without the balancing power of a will and a heart properly instructed in duty to God.

"Religion as a code of positive principles, has become in many systems of education, a sort of elective study; it is optional—it forms no part of a prescribed course. As a result, the youthful mind comes to the conclusion that religion is not so important. Intellect is highly developed, but conscience appears to be neglected. Bank defalcations, senate briberies, postal frauds, stock gambling, divorce increase, stage indecencies, literary degeneracy—surely, these are not the result of illiteracy—they are the crimes of educated people.

"Public opinoin has allowed Christ to be deposed from His place as a teacher of youth. It has allowed the non-Christian and the anti-Christian, and even the atheist to emasculate our public education. Those who have set up for themselves distinctively Christian schools, where the positive doctrines of Christ are made the doctrines of life, are ridiculed as hostile to the best interests of the community. It still remains true, and it cannot be asserted too strongly, that we must reform our education if we would remove at their source the evils which threaten us. We differ as to what we mean by religion; but to the mind of the Catholic it means a positive code of doctrine and morals having its source in Christ and its authority in Christianity, which is essentially a teacher. We can be satisfied with nothing less if we listen at all to the demands of a Christian conscience.

"The Catholic Church stands boldly against the absence of religion in any stage of instruction, and insists that in its system of education through the church, religion should form the woof and warp of all instruction in home, in school, in college and university.

"Thinking men see the need of religion in our public educational system. They realize that religious principles alone can solve our social and economical problems. The shadows of the great truths are not sufficient. We demand the truth in its fullness, as it shines forth in Christ."

A Tree Washington Planted.

One of Germantown's landmarks is about to fall at the hands of Father Time. It is a large silver fir tree, which tradition says was planted by George Washington upon the grounds of Upsala, at Cleveden and Germantown avenues. The old tree is rapidly falling into decay, and the present tenants of the place contemplate having it chopped down to remove a dangerous menace to passers by. It is over 150 feet high, and is of the same species as the trees which compose the famous Black Forest of Germany. Recently to commemorate the marriage of Dr. William N. Johnson, there was planted beside it a fir tree which has been pronounced by botanical experts to be the finest and rarest evergreen under cultivation.—[Philadelphia Record.

Farrari Sandusky Nearly Killed by "Dead" Balloon.

Can't Cut Loose and Is Raked Through the Noxious Air. Girl Dragged.

"Cut loose, Farrari—cut loose, quick, for God's sake!" cried a slender girl in mortal terror yesterday afternoon, nearly 2500 feet above the earth, as she floated gracefully away in the air, hanging by her hands above the diminished city below—floated safely but fearfully away from an aerial companion in danger of his life, just starting, feet downward, on a race to the ground with a big balloon that fell "dead" in mid-air above his head.

The double balloon ascension made yesterday by Edna Springer and Farrari Sandusky from Chutes Park was the most thrilling mid-air event that ever occurred in Los Angeles. The two performers went up together, the girl clinging to a trapese hung just below her companion's, and when at an altitude approximated to have been 2500 feet, the girl cut loose according to programme, and began a successful descent in her parachute. Her companion was to have followed suit immediately, but no sooner had the first parachute began its voyage than the balloon listed heavily to one side and began to rake the remaining aeronaut to and fro through the air. The girl screamed to him to cut loose, but his efforts to free himself proved vain, and, with its vitality fast ebbing away, the balloon started toward the earth, threatening every moment to overwhelm and smother its unwilling passenger in its noxious folds.

There were 11,000 people in and about the park at the time, and a subdued murmur ran through the crowd as it waited, spellbound, watching the two performers, one floating safely away earward, unable to aid her companion in distress.

The descent of the balloon was comparatively slow at first, while the aeronaut was struggling to free his parachute, and the girl landed on a lawn at Los Angeles and Fourteenth streets almost five minutes before the sagging balloon made its final flight to the ground.

Finding that he could not cut the parachute loose, Sandusky suspended himself from the trapese by his hands so as to land as much in advance of the bag as possible, that he might make an attempt to escape being enfolded by it as soon as his feet touched something firm—and down they came, the useless parachute opening and shutting ominously.

Luckily there was considerable breeze to buoy the falling mass. Just as the pace began to grow unbearable, Sandusky's feet struck in a network of telephone wires at Main and Fourteenth street, in front of the residence of Dr. A. J. Scholl. Throwing himself to one side as he rebounded from his dangerous landing place, the aeronaut just missed being caught by the heavy folds of the balloon, which swept across onto the roof of the house, rending itself open. The man made his way over the wires—luckily telephone wires, not being sufficiently charged with electricity to injure him—and climbed down the pole, bruised but whole.

The double ascent, considered a dangerous thing in itself, almost proved a catastrophe at the start. The balloon broke away from its anchorage when little more than half filled with gas, just after the performers had been made fast to the trapeses by wrist straps. There was some misunderstanding among the attendants, one crying "let go," before the time and with the loosening of one of the guy ropes, the balloon caught the current of air and tore away.

Edna Springer, having left the trapese, was still standing on the ground, looking in another direction, when the escaped balloon did not immediately take an upward course, but dragged the girl along after it, her wrist straps, her toes just touching the ground. She dodged the hydrant pole just before she was dashed against it, and about thirty feet further on succeeded in throwing herself over the trapese and drawing herself up as her perch cleared the succeeding obstacles.

Both the performers are local people, Sandusky residing at No. 261 South Main street, and Miss Springer living with her family on Boyle avenue. The latter is a steady, assuming young lady, apparently about 20 years old. Sandusky is a rather slightly-built young fellow, who is just beginning his career as an aeronaut.

"The only thing I was afraid of," he said last night at Chutes Park, "was of having the balloon blow on top of me, which would mean suffocation in its fumes. The trouble with the knife-blade that is provided to cut the parachute loose when it is pulled. The blade was dull, and turned when it came in contact with the ropes. I immediately suspended myself by my hands, ready to jump when I struck something, and this saved me."

The lady in the case was also very young, a protége of Aeronaut Burton, and was with him in Macon, Ga., when he and his wife were some years ago during a descension similar to yesterday's. She was the instigator of yesterday's terrible ascension, a performance that was considered so uncertain that the girl that the Chutes management made her sign a lease from all claims upon them should harm befall her before they billed the double ascension.

Last evening she was limping painfully from the effect of bruises on her limbs received while she was being dragged over the ground.

Many pedestrians in the vicinity noticed the peculiar ascension and queer descent of the balloon, and gathered in the streets about 5 o'clock to see it tumble.

The accompanying snapshot was taken by O. A. Emerson, who has a business concession on the pier, just as the balloon tore away, dragging the girl after it.

The Language He Knew.

"We are not exactly linguists," remarked the Ellis Island official thoughtfully, "but we all have a few stock phrases in nearly every language of the globe—things that we use in our business, you know. We usually have a theory that we can tell the nationality of a person at sight.

"Well, the other day the regular interpreter was called away and I took his place for a few moments. The next man to come before me was a man who sized up as being an Italian, so I spoke to him in Italian where he was born. I might as well have been talking Sanscrit; my Italian never reached him. Then I tried him in Spanish, in three Polish dialects, then in Russian, and finally in German and French, but all to no purpose. I then the regular interpreter came back and I said to him, with some warmth, I wonder what —— —— language this is?" "——understands, anyhow," he replied. "I understand that, sor," [New York Telegram.

OUR SHERIFF CHASED BY BELGIAN CAVALR

SHERIFF WHITE returned to Los Angeles yesterday after a trip to Berlin, where he went to secure Edwin F. Masterson, who, with Christie and Taylor, swindled the Continental Building and Loan Association of San Francisco out of over $100,000 by means of forged deeds, contracts and other instruments. The Sheriff did not bring back his man, owing to the law's delays in Germany, but in six weeks at the outside the German officials will take up Masterson's case, or rather, the papers that refer to it, and if they find them legal and Masterson's crime, that of forgery, extraditable, they will send the swindler across to New York in a German passenger vessel and in charge of the captain.

The Sheriff went first to Washington, where, after some study of the law, the State Department issued requisition papers for the fugitive. He found while there that he would have to present to the German officials a certified copy of the California statutes, and so wired to Gov. Pardee to have this done. The Governor replied that the volume was on the way and the Sheriff left for Germany, assured by the State Department that it would be forwarded to Berlin. The Sheriff reached his destination eight days before the law book, and had a chance for sightseeing in the German capital, as well as to [illegible] into German before the judge would recognize them, and this was done at a cost of $75. After the Sheriff, under whom the case would be tried, took a vacation, and said it would be two months so the Sheriff made a return boat—had only two hours to see it, he says, and drove so fast in a cab in the city of Antwerp to make connections that a troop of Belgian cavalry tried to head him off, thinking he had assassinated the Emperor or [illegible] guilty of lese majesté. The Sheriff crossed the gang plank just as it was being drawn in.

Sheriff White spent three days in the village of London and saw Westminster Abbey, the house that Little Willie did live in, and a hostler who used to drive His Majesty's, King Edward's, coach man.

The Sheriff says that Berlin is the cleanest city he ever saw; cleaner than Los Angeles. They have some improvements of boys there to keep the streets clean, and the kids scrap for every piece of rubbish as newsboys here do for a nickel.

Masterson, the slick swindler, is in jail at Lunden. Schlewig-Holstein, and will remain there until the Sheriff of New York. The Sheriff will be obliged to take another trip across the water to take another trip across the ocean to receive the prisoner from the German vessel.

THE SOUTHWEST.

Methodism is soon to add another important landmark to its advancement in this city. This monument of faith will be the Centennial Church which is to be erected at the northwest corner of West Twenty-second street and Union avenue. The plans have been adopted for the entire edifice, but it is probable the Sunday-school department will be built first and this will be used for public worship during the building of the auditorium. For several months the Centennial congregation has been meeting in a large tent on the site selected for the new building, but the congregation now meets in one of the halls of this locality. At the fourth society passed resolutions indorsing the pastor, Dr. Cherrington, the pastor, and dertaken of maintaining a high-class rish, with the attractions of clean sports and games.

SEE TOMORROW'S

Well, good morning.

Aren't you sorry now that you didn't step in and get a Silverwood hat last Saturday?

Everybody looks newly hatted.

And the newest looking hats have "Silverwood" stamped inside.

Almost ashamed of that old "straw," we know it.

The world moves fast. The man with the wrong hat gets elbowed out of the crowd. He ought to. Hot up! Be abreast of your New York brother—don't let 'em tell you that Los Angeles is a year behind.

Silverwood hats are this fall's smartest ideas.

The only man we can't "hat" is the man who wants a "has been" style.

Can't supply it.

The last old hat—and it wasn't so old either—went out the rear door several months ago.

We'll be glad to give you our best care tomorrow—glad to show you styles whether you mean to buy or not.

Rather Pointed Titles.

The following incident is told of a popular and well-to-do Thirty-second Ward bachelor, who is a patron of the Wagner institute branch of the free library:

"I am going to the country, Miss Blank," he said to the young lady at the desk, "and want to take a couple of interesting novels, but I can't make up my mind which two to select. Couldn't you help me out?"

"I am afraid my selections might not prove interesting to you," replied Miss Blank.

"Just pick out two books for me and I'll guarantee to like them," he rejoined, gallantly.

"Have you read Barrie's or Reade's novels?" she asked.

"No; get me one of each, and I'll be satisfied," he replied.

She selected two and handed them to her spouseless acquaintance, who, after warmly thanking her for the favor she had done him, turned up the backs of the books and read these titles:

"When A Man's Single."

"It Is Never Too Late to Mend."—[Philadelphia Ledger

UNIVERSITY.

Among the hundreds of people in Los Angeles and vicinity whose investment of their hard-earned wages with the "get-rich-quick" concerns would be sweet to forget is a young clerk in one of the prominent University stores. This young man had saved $150 when the promoters of one of the "hot-air companies" which has been grilling the people of Los Angeles, came to him and told him that if he would invest the money he had saved they would take him in on the "ground floor," elect him as one of the officers of the company, and guarantee him a salary of $100 per month. The proprietor of the store in which he was employed was taken into his confidence and urged his young employé not to make the venture, as he said it was sure to prove a fake. The young man's pastor also got wind of the scheme and used his best endeavors to persuade him to give up the foolhardy scheme, and he almost decided to do so. But the oily-tongued promoters got hold of him again. The bait they held out was too tempting and he bit. The death knell of the company was sounded soon after, and among the saddest of the mourners was the young groceryman, whose money was all swallowed up, leaving him nothing but an experience that will not be soon forgotten.
Manager Seymour of the football team of the university, claims that the local eleven is going to be stronger than for several seasons past. Nearly all of the members of last year's team will be back, and try for places on the 'varsity. Logan Wheatly, whose reputation as a player is well known throughout Southern California, will return from Arizona, where he has been for the past year, and will prove a great help to the U.S.C. team in this year's struggle for gridiron laurels. Several new men have enrolled in the school who have had some experience in the game, and with proper training should make good players. The athletic rooms are in much better shape than ever before, and are now fairly good training quarters. The campus has also been fixed up and will be in shape for practice as soon as the college opens.
Mr. and Mrs. Blackman of Ontario are stopping with Proof, and Mrs. William T. Randall, corner of Wesley avenue and West Thirty-fifth street.
Mrs. Anna B. Salem died of consumption at her late residence, No. 630 West Thirty-ninth street. The deceased was a native of Sweden and was 62 years of age. Funeral services were held Friday. Interment at Rosedale.
The addition to the University public school on West Thirty-ninth street near Normandie avenue, is progressing rapidly, and the contractors expect to have it fully completed when school opens.
E. A. Hitchcock and family of No. 923 West Fortieth street have returned to their old home at Prescott, Ariz.
H. F. Hoffman and family of No. 1228 West Thirty-seventh street are spending the month of September at their cottage at Ocean Park.
R. Scott has purchased the Derby property in the Rowley tract.
J. M. Griffin has bought a lot in block 3 of the Brearly and Sinsabaugh tract and will improve it with a handsome residence.

RESORT PLAN POSTPONED.

Potter Hotel Company Abandons for the Present the Scheme to Expand to Santa Cruz Island.

It now looks as if that great resort that has been planned for Pelican Bay, Santa Cruz Island, in the Santa Barbara Channel, as an undertaking of the Potter Hotel Company, will not materialize, at least for some time.
Milo M. Potter, president of the company, has been in San Francisco for a week, one of the purposes of his trip being to confer with Caire Bros., owners of the island, with reference to its lease for resort purposes.
Upon the return of Mr. Potter a meeting of the board of directors of the Potter Hotel Company was held at the Van Nuys Saturday morning to decide whether or no expansion of its interests to the islands of the sea should be undertaken. It is said that one of the principal members, who at first advocated the island scheme, has now set himself dead against it, and not succeeding in changing this one dissenting vote, the rest of the directors agreed to abandon the project for the present.

THE TIMES' "FRIENDLY LIST."

Elsewhere in this issue of The Times will be found a list of regular local advertising patrons of this journal. This list, comprising as it does the names of individuals, firms and corporations, represents about every sort of reputable business, profession, industry or occupation that can be benefited by publicity—and this means practically every variety of human activity. It will be seen by an examination of the list that it includes the names of a large majority of the enterprising, progressive business men and business concerns of Los Angeles. It is, however, necessarily incomplete, as it does not include the names of a large number who patronize the advertising columns of The Times, but pay cash over the counter, and whose names are therefore never placed upon the books. Nor are the names of "foreign" advertisers, that is, those who are located outside the State, included. The names are those of local advertisers who have had accounts at this office during the past few months.

The Times does not hesitate to say that it is proud of this evidence of appreciation from the intelligent community in which it is published, and it is the more proud because this sort of evidence of appreciation is constantly increasing. The sworn statements published from time to time show that not only the circulation but the advertising patronage of The Times is steadily making good, substantial gains from week to week and from month to month. This is illustrated by the record for the month just past. The average daily gain in circulation for August, 1903, over the same month last year was 5424 copies, while the advertising record for August just past shows 2871 columns, a gain of 371 columns over August, 1902.

And thus The Times' "friendly list" steadily grows longer.

LABOR DAY.

Today organized unionism will celebrate an occasion, or anniversary, which it designates as "Labor Day." It is fitting that a few words should be said on the subject, and the present is the most appropriate time to say them.

To other and subservient journals The Times willingly leaves the task of fawning upon and kowtowing to the men and the organizations which parade under the banner of unionism. The Times prizes the truth above everything else, and it does not hesitate to speak the truth upon this subject, as upon all others.

This journal is falsely referred to by its enemies in the trade-union ranks (who are about the only enemies it has in the world,) as being "opposed to labor," and especially as being opposed to organized labor. The Times is not opposed to labor, in any true sense of the word. It is not opposed to organized labor, as such. It is opposed to the fallacies, the usurpations, the false assumptions, and the other wrongs of organized labor.

One of the principal fallacies of organized labor is the mistaken assumption that it can monopolize the labor market of the country. It can never do this, and its efforts having this end in view are so much wasted energy—worse than wasted, in fact. So long as men have the right to differ—and this right, let us hope, will never be taken from them—they will differ as to the feasibility of joining such secret, proscriptive organizations as labor unions. In proportion as those organizations invade the domain of individual and fundamental rights, in that proportion will they excite the just opposition of independent, right-thinking individual citizens. This opposition will include the vast majority of the people, so long as unionism seeks to establish and maintain a monopoly of the labor market. The American people will no more stand for a monopoly of the labor market than they will stand for a monopoly of the industrial and commercial markets.

Another supreme fallacy of organized unionism is the idea that it will be permitted to accomplish its ends by terrorism and violence. In proportion as it seeks to accomplish its purposes by such means, it will surely suffer the condemnation of an enlightened public opinion, which will not tolerate any cause that must succeed, if at all, by violence. Public condemnation means defeat for unionism, or for any cause upon which the just reproach of public opinion falls.

In the local labor field, the false leaders of unionism have inaugurated numerous strikes and some boycotts. These have all failed—ignominiously and completely and pitiably failed. They have failed because they were wrong; wrong in principle, wrong in conception; wrong in methods of attempted execution.

The efforts of industrial disturbers will fall in the local labor field in the future, as they have failed in the past, and for the same reasons. The overwhelming public sentiment in this community stands for justice, for right, for fair play, for industrial freedom, for individual freedom. It will not tolerate the senseless domination of ignorance and fanaticism in the realm of industry. Having before them the disastrous results which have followed industrial serfdom in other communities, the intelligent and freedom-loving citizens of Los Angeles and of Southern California will sturdily and steadfastly maintain their freedom at any cost, in the future as they have done in the past.

This is the Labor Day message of The Times to "organized labor."

THE RIGHT MAN.

The following special dispatch from Washington was published in The Times a few days ago:

"The series of assaults made upon Secretary Hitchcock of late, using as ammunition certain local conditions in Indian Territory and Oklahoma, is merely part of the general campaign designed to drive him from the Cabinet. He has been a stumbling block in the way of political marauders from the day he entered office. He has had no mercy on rascality, when detected, though half a dozen Senators stood behind each rascal. In this respect, he stands almost unique among the Secretaries of the Interior of the last quarter of the century, and quite so in more recent years.

"He is a man of strong feelings, and although passing a brief period in the school of diplomacy, where it is supposed that one's standards become somewhat liberalized and one's manners brought under softening influences, he has remained as blunt and outspoken as ever where rottenness is concerned. This has been very offensive to some of the people who have visited the department with axes to grind.

"Because he believed at the outset that he could hunt down scoundrelism more successfully by holding his tongue than by noisily heralding his movements, he has been denounced as trying to smother an inquiry which he was really struggling, night and day, to bring to a focus."

That is the kind of man we like. And moreover, that is the kind of man that the United States needs—badly needs—just now, when the country seems to be threatened by the predacious plutocrat on the one side and the domineering demagogue on the other.

As The Times has previously observed, it is highly important, just at this time, when the national irrigation law is about to be put into effect, that a strong hand at the helm should restrain the unholy and selfish ambitions of land grabbers, who would deprive the bona fide home seeker of his birthright. These men are tirelessly active —these cattle barons and timber-land thieves, and oil-land grabbers—and, as the dispatch above quoted indicates, they have unfortunately many influential friends at court, to back them in their nefarious designs. Also, they have, in the person of Elwood Mead, an attaché of the Agricultural Department, a man who, for some inscrutable reason, is permitted, while drawing pay from the United States government, to go around preaching the heresy of State cession, which would deprive the government of the power to prevent the wholesale stealing of the public lands.

Hence, as we have said, the people of the United States are to be sincerely congratulated on the fact that there now is in the Cabinet, at the head of this department, a sterling man, with a stiff backbone, like Secretary Hitchcock, and he should receive hearty and enthusiastic support from all right-thinking people. With a man like this in the Cabinet, at the head of a department that controls the public lands, and a man in the White House, like Roosevelt, who is another of the same kind, and who also knows his West, we may safely believe that the underhanded plots of these wealthy land grabbers will not prevail, and that Uncle Sam will have an opportunity to offer productive home sites to hundreds of thousands of honest and industrious settlers.

A TAILORING TRUST.

An interesting story recently came from the East to the effect that Charles M. Schwab, who has risen so rapidly from a position at a dollar a week to the control of millions, and who recently resigned his position as manager of the steel trust, is about to go into the tailoring business. Not that Mr. Schwab is going to open a tailor shop, and take your measure for a pair of trousers, but it is said that he is engaged in organizing a trust, to be known as the "united tailors," with headquarters in New York, five branch stores, according to the story, having already been leased in various parts of that city, the idea being to open branch establishments in every city in the United States of 25,000 or more inhabitants, with as many as 100 stores in New York, giving employment altogether to half a million men. Later it would run the mills for the manufacture of cloth, both here and abroad. It is further stated that a great central school will be established in New York, at which cutters, trimmers and salesmen will be taught, and, then sent out through the country to branches where their services may be required.

This story may or may not be true, but at any rate it suggests some reflections in regard to the tailoring business. To outsiders it appears very strange that in these days, when the United States is leading the world in manufactured goods of all kinds, and is thereby arousing the apprehension and jealousy of European nations, one article of such general use should still be imported entirely from Europe. This is the highest grade of woolen goods for men's clothing, which comes chiefly from the west of England, it having been found impossible so far to make in this country a high-grade woolen cloth that will hold its color. Two reasons are given, by those who have studied the question, for this condition of affairs. In the first place, it is said, as in the case of certain beers, to be a question of water. There is said to be a variety of water used by cloth manufacturers in Western England which, in spite of diligent search, no one has yet been able to find in the United States. This seems almost incredible, and even if it is true, one might suppose that in these days of overcoming great obstacles in manufacturing some chemical preparation might be added to water that would give it the required properties. The second reason is, however, probably the leading cause for our failure to make the finest grades of woolen cloth in the United States. It is due to our great mania for rapid work, as compared with the patient, plodding methods of the Old World. Also, doubtless, the much higher rates of wages in this country may have "something to do with the case." In England, it appears that they go carefully over the wool, again, and again, and yet again, until every particle of the grease that is so plentiful in the raw wool is removed, the process in some cases taking as long as five years, before the wool is considered ready to market. Americans, of course, would not be satisfied with such a tedious process as this. With us it must be "from the sheep's back to the man's back," just as we boast of making biscuits in the afternoon from flour that was growing, in the shape of wheat, the same morning.

However, with the constantly increasing demand in this country for the very finest grades of woolen goods, it certainly seems as if there should be a good opportunity for the establishment here of factories to turn out, if possible, material fully equal to that made in Great Britain, especially as the duty and freight on these imported goods comes to something like 100 per cent. on the cost value in the old country. Fine cloths are now being made in the United States from yarns woven in England. Possibly, if Mr. Schwab should open up his tailoring establishment, he would go a step farther, and give us American clothing of high grade, made from yarns woven in the United States, of the wool from American sheep.

The proposition to have the next international yacht race brought off in the waters of the Pacific should be given serious consideration by the defenders of the America's cup. The contestants could be given assurance of a spanking breeze and opportunity to sail under the fairest and bluest of skies. Either the open sea or the Bay of San Francisco could be utilized as a course with equal promise of giving the yachts sea room and propulsion within the time limit. The Sandy Hook course always uncertain, as has been established by the races just concluded, and in order that popular interest may be given a fillip, the next match ought to come off in the waters of the California coast. By all means let us have a chance to see Great Britain given her next beating in the yachting game. The Atlantic has had a monopoly of the sport quite too long already.

Our firemen are riding on the street cars and paying fare, but it isn't costing them a cent. It is different with the people who pay taxes in Los Angeles; and the worst of it is that the expenditure is entirely unnecessary. That is a piece of foolishness that ought to be stopped without further delay. Let there be an end to the child's play in this business.

The astute old gentleman by the name of Delaney who manages the pugilistic ventures of our distinguished townsman, Mr. Jeffries, has set his heart upon having the bout with Jack Munroe come off in Los Angeles. Not that the suckers are more plentiful here, but because they are somewhat less satiated than those farther north.

Bryan will agree to support Senator Gorman for the Presidency provided he is allowed to help distribute the patronage. The Senator need not hesitate to enter into a bargain of that kind. He will never come to the place where he will be called upon to "make good."

Apparently quite a lot of people haven't heard that the unions are going to "down The Times" in the immediate pretty soon. Else why should so many have paid their good ducats for subscriptions five years in advance, during the recent scholarship contest?

You may say what you will about the unspeakable Turk, but, just the same, he's a fighting man from the ground up. And maybe that's why all these threats to wipe him off of the map never come to a head.

A sojourner in Sacramento some nights ago stabbed himself because he couldn't find a place to sleep. Who in Sam Hill has been cutting the willows along the bank of the raging slickens river, anyway?

Uncle Sam is suing a Tennessee Sheriff because he permitted a prisoner to escape. If Uncle gets a judgment we might try out those officials at Folsom and see what California would get.

Alaska is bounded on the north by an ice floe, on the west by sealskin sacques in the rough, on the east by cold weather and on the south by a dispute.

With the antiseptic barber shop in sight we now confidently look forward to the time when the boon of a talkless barber will also be ours.

The sojourners by the summer sea are beginning to trek back to where they will find a lovely climate to cool off in.

If Langley's flying machine doesn't fly pretty soon it will cut no bigger figure in history than the Keely motor.

The Highlands volcano will resume eruption next Wednesday. Prepare for showers of lava and loud rumblings.

It will soon be time to plant shade trees. Have you made the necessary arrangements?

HERE IS THE TIMES' "FRIENDLY LIST."

Herewith is presented a list giving the names and addresses of local advertisers who regularly patronize the columns of The Times. It will be seen that the list includes the major portion of the business community of Los Angeles. Nearly every industry in the city is represented and there is no "padding." Every individual, firm or corporation named is a regular, bona fide advertiser, as the columns of The Times will show.

The list does not contain the names of any of the thousands of small "liner" advertisers who pay cash over the counter every month and whose business, aggregated, gives The Times a volume of classified advertising that is not equalled by any paper in the United States west of Chicago.

The Times' "friendly list" is longer today than ever before.

DEVIL'S OWN ARE STRIKES.

Slam the Walking Delegates, Says a Preacher.

Labor-union Bossism Condemned by the Adventists.

Successful Camp Meeting Closed. Schools and Sanitarium Given a Boost.

The final sessions of the annual conference and camp meeting of the Seventh Day Adventists of Southern California were held yesterday, and drew large crowds to the picturesque camp set on San Pedro street at Twenty-third.

The meeting this year has been very successful, and 800 persons have been in camp. Twenty churches are represented, with a membership of over 1200. The annual conference was composed of seventy delegates from the churches, and has held sessions daily during the camp meeting.

For president of the conference, Elder Clarence Santee of Fernando was elected; secretary, C. A. Pedicord, Fernando; missionary secretary, W. W. Prescott, Pasadena; State superintendent of schools, E. S. Balleiger, Monrovia; Conference Committee, Elder Clarence Santee, Elder W. M. Healey, San Diego; Elder R. S. Owen, Elder S. Brownsberger, Fernando; Elder C. E. Holden, Los Angeles; A. M. Way, Pomona; Robert Vickery, Monrovia; L. O. Graham, Escondido.

An interesting feature of the present conference was the report of the church school established last year at Healdsburg, where the old Methodist seminary was purchased. The school is reported to be in a promising condition, and it is expected that 100 students will be enrolled this fall. The new semester will open Wednesday. Two teachers have been added to the faculty, Miss Jane Barber, professor of mathematics, and Mrs. Fannie Campbell, teacher of sciences.

The Advent church members give a tithe of their incomes for the support of the general church work, and at the conference which closed yesterday it was voted to pay another tithe for the support of the schools.

Another feature of public interest was the assuming of control of the sanitarium on West Third street by the Southern California conference. This is to be conducted as a city mission, and it is the intention of the conference to establish a large sanitarium at some outside point. This matter has been under way some time, but much difficulty has been experienced in securing a desirable site. It is expected the location will be selected during the present conference meeting.

HE MAKES STRIKES.

The last days of the camp meeting brought forth many interesting sermons and addresses; and probably one of the most interesting of the whole series was that delivered by Elder S. C. Wilcox of Oakland, editor of the church paper, "Signs of the Times," and one of the most prominent men in the work of the church today. Elder Wilcox took as his theme the present labor troubles as a fulfillment of Biblical prophecy, and he found no fault with the statement that they were instigated by Old Nick himself, and are the very works of the devil.

The text from which this much-talked discourse was given is found in Isaiah 8:9-12: "Associate yourselves, O ye people, and ye shall be broken in pieces; and give ear, all ye of far countries; gird yourselves and ye shall be broken in pieces; gird yourselves and ye shall be broken in pieces. Take counsel together and it shall come to nought; speak the word and it shall not stand: for God is with us. For the Lord spake thus to me with a strong hand, and instructed me that I should not walk in the way of this people, saying, Say ye not, a confederacy, to all to whom this people shall say, A confederacy; neither fear ye their fear nor be afraid. Sanctify the Lord of Hosts Himself; and let Him be your fear, and let Him be your dread."

The speaker portrayed in a graphic manner the course of labor-unionism and the effects of strikes and boycotts. He had witnessed them in the cities of the United States, especially Chicago. He gave instances of the malicious overriding of law and safety by the labor agitators and their servile dupes in the labor unions. Elder Owen also spoke of the good resulting from the combination of capital to crush out the small dealer, and declared that the combination of wealth on the one hand, and the misguided policies of the labor unions on the other hand, grind the middle people between two millstones, is the very incarnation of the claim that this is in accord with Biblical prophecy.

Elder Owen advised his people to withdraw from the labor unions and thus themselves separate from the influence of the walking delegate and the boycotter. His plea was for an upright life, that would regard the rights of one's neighbor, whether employer, and a constant preparation for the second coming of the Lord and the great judgment day, which this people believe is imminent.

LAST DAY IN CAMP.

Yesterday there were immense congregations at the various tent meetings. A mammoth tent is used for the morning public services, and a large church has been used for the young people's services. Each had more than ample accommodate.

The morning service there was a sermon by Elder Bagby of Oakland, on the supreme power of God as evidenced by a regenerated man; and the way open to mankind for the knowledge through the Book of Revelation and book of nature.

Elder William Simpson, who has been in this conference from Canada, was the speaker at the afternoon meeting, and last night the closing meeting of the conference, was given over to short addresses by the elders and a social meeting.

Today the 150 tents will be taken down and the people will scatter out to their homes of Southern California. One of the most successful gatherings ever held by the Seventh Day Adventists in this part of the State.

"DAY OFF."

Mayer and His Jug Jugged After Little Celebration in Eastlake Park Yesterday.

Mayer, a laborer, had a day off Sunday and enjoyed his Sunday recreation at Eastlake Park with jovial friends and one, two jugs of "dago red." It was, "a book of verses underneath the bow, a jug of wine"—with the verses left out—"and Thou"—Thou was Special Officer Rabe of the park.

Rabe wanted to know why Mayer was so boisterous, so unseemly drunk, and why he shouldnt be put out. Mayer inquired solicitously of the officer if he thought he could put him out.

Now Rabe has charmed snakes, trained animals—wilder than Mayer—and done a thousand other things. Among his accomplishments is that of being handy with his dukes; so he beat Mayer until the latter squealed for mercy. Mayer was locked up for disturbing the peace, and stitches were taken in his face so he wouldn't lose any more of the jug of claret he drank.

THE PLAYHOUSES

GRAND OPERAHOUSE. If the old Orpheum Theater had a conscious intelligence it must have imagined itself dreaming away back in its first days of pristine usefulness yesterday afternoon. The occasion, of course, was the return of the house to the field of the "legitimate," it being reopened under the name of the "Grand Operahouse," a title which it bore in the early days.

The old theater was not dark for a single evening, however. The final performance by the actors of the Orpheum circuit company took place there Saturday evening, and yesterday afternoon Walter Sanford's players began a stock engagement under the changed management, presenting as their first offering the Drury Lane drama, "Sporting Life," written by Cecil Raleigh and Seymour Hicks. The action of the play passes in England, and has to do with the adventures and the misadventures of a noble Englishman, John, Earl of Woodstock. Woodstock's fortune has been frittered away and at last he is compelled to part with his ancestral estate. He is saved at length, however, by a horse of his called "Lady Love," who wins enormous stakes at Epsom Downs for him. He is pestered by the usual complicated and rather melodramatic plot, of course, but after the manner of all true heroes he comes out all right at last.

The star of the performance had not a line of speaking part, however. In the third act of the play there is a real prize-fighting scene, where Woodstock, whose man fails him at the last minute, jumps in the ring in evening dress and proceeds to do up his professional opponent in good style. That "opponent" is Mark Shaughnessy, and the "boys" gave him a welcome yesterday that could be heard a block. Shaughnessy wades right into his man, too, and when at last he himself fails it is with the writhing, agonized contortion that every man who has seen a knock-out body blow given is familiar with. Shaughnessy's début made the distinct hit of the afternoon.

Of the players, William Desmond, Griffith Wray, Miss Ethelle Earle and Miss Laura Wall won marked favor with the audience. Walter Sanford, proprietor of the aggregation, is in the role of Isadore Andreade, a Jewish money lender, who is really the philanthropist and "angel" of the piece. His make-up is especially good. A good comedy specialty is done by Thomas Shearer and Miss Adelaide Smith.

The Grand Operahouse is to be marked for one thing; it has the prettiest drop curtain in town. The advertising poster which has so long done duty was at least not in evidence yesterday. The scene set for the Earl's Court exhibition, with its rows of twinkling lights and other appurtenances of a pretty night illumination, is very good indeed, and won spontaneous applause from the audience at the rise of the curtain.

A new permanent theatrical orchestra played its first play yesterday afternoon, also, with Max E. Eberger as director. Conductor Frankenstein, who has so long presided at the desk here, will be at the other theater tonight, with all his players.

Although the Grand Operahouse seems to be drawing as big crowds as did the old Orpheum, the box-office reports that advance sales of seats in the new theater is almost unprecedented. Matinées at the Grand will be given Sunday, Tuesday and Saturday.

At the Churches Yesterday.

Salvation and Judgment.

REV. Dr. Willett, preaching in the Orchard Avenue Baptist Church yesterday morning on "The Ancient Penman and His Mystic Mark," Ezekiel ix. 1-6, said, in part:

"This ninth chapter of Ezekiel gives us a composite picture of salvation and judgment. It reminds us of many highly figurative passages in Daniel and Revelations. Through these weird images and striking symbols great truths concerning the divine government are brought home with clearness to the mind. Jerusalem is the scene and its sins the subject. Digging through the wall in his vision the prophet had uncovered its secret idolatries, yet notwithstanding its sins the city is protected by angel guards. This reminds us of the psalmist's exclamation, 'Except the Lord keep the city the watchman waketh in vain,' I believe that God has set invisible guards over our cities and our homes; that immunity from pestilence, famine, disease and war is to be credited more to the unseen and supernatural than to the visible and human safeguards. The loud voice summons the six watchers who are now ready to use in judgment the slaughter weapons that hitherto had been for defense and protection. Teaching us what the flood, the fire and brimstone rained on Sodom, the captivity of Israel, the destruction of Jerusalem and other visitations have taught, that there is a limit to the divine forbearance, and that God's spirit will not always strive with man.

"The ministers of mercy now become executors of justice, yet ere they are permitted to strike a blow a seventh appears among them clothed in linen, the covering of the priest, and bearing, not a weapon of destruction, but a writer's ink-horn, by his side. The destroying angels stand before the altar as if to suggest that whatever they do must be done in view of the great sacrifice which the altar of the old time foreshadowed. On some of the recovered tablets of ancient Syria a 'scribe of the host' is depicted among the warriors, whose duty was to number the heads of those slain in the battle. This scribe in the vision, however, is interested in numbering not the slain, but the saved. His commission is to go through the city and set a mark upon the foreheads of the men that sigh and cry for the abominations that are done. His going through the city first, reminds us of that great principle of divine procedure so uniformly taught throughout the scriptures, that mercy goes before judgment.
